Project specification

- 1.1. The aim of the competition is to develop systems capable of automatically detecting knives concealed on a person, at a distance, to be used by police forces.

The systems must be able to detect knives in the presence of commonly carried items, including but not limited to keys, wallets, mobile phones, and tablets.

Systems can either be fixed during operation and capable of scanning a defined area (region) of space containing one or more subjects, or capable of being carried and operated by a single police officer for at least the duration of a shift (8 hours).

A fixed system should ideally work at a distance of 2m to 6m, while a body-worn or handheld system should work at a distance of approximately 2m. The Home Office is prepared to fund the further development of systems to meet these requirements, even if their detection range currently falls outside of these distances.

- 1.2. It is the intention that the overall programme will be comprised of 3 phases. At this stage only phase 1 is confirmed and contracts will only be given for phase 1.
- 1.3. In a potential phase 2 we will ask successful applicants from phase 1 to further develop their solutions by enhancing performance, develop clear concept of operations and take part in further operational trials or operational pilots to achieve pre-production prototype stage.

Operational trials are designed to assess the performance of the system in an environment that represents real operational conditions to a reasonable degree. The primary aim of an operational trial is to establish baseline performance of a system outside the laboratory environment. Police officers or staff may operate and test the system to understand its operational value, and feedback may be provided on other factors such as usability or interoperability. This will allow decisions to be made regarding further development. Operational trials will be provided and facilitated by the Home Office and partner forces. Operational trials are not acceptance tests.

Operational pilots are designed to assess the system against the user and system requirements under real operational conditions. The primary aim of an operational pilot is to serve as initial acceptance testing before a potential procurement exercise. Only operational users may operate the system with the clear purpose of assessing its ability to meet the operational requirements. This may include using the system for law enforcement purposes. If the outcome of the operational pilot is negative, further development may take place, although only minor modifications are expected at this point. Operational pilots are for testing systems that are in an advanced development stage, supporting progression to a system which is completed and qualified through test and demonstration (TRL8).

1.4. Any potential Phase 3 will be a separate process.

The potential 2nd phase

The potential 3rd phase

1.5. The scope of this requirement is as follows:

- Only physical knife detection systems are to be developed
- The systems should be self-contained providing a clear alarm when a knife is detected
- Systems that are specially designed or specially and significantly modified for the detection of concealed knives. This means that systems must be able to detect knives in the presence of commonly carried items, including but not limited to keys, wallets, mobile phones, and tablets.
- This also means that the prototype system must perform better than a random classifier when its true positive rate is plotted against its false positive rate. Specific performance requirements will be developed with potential end-users during Phase 1, and it is expected that successful projects will eventually deliver systems with a high true positive detection rate, coupled with a low false alarm rate.

1.6. The following are out of scope:

- Exclusively software-based or virtual systems, necessitating the use of pre-existing infrastructure (third-part integration)

- Concept of operations, training or best practice guidance without an accompanying physical detection system
- Systems that are on the market already and available to customers

1.7. In particular, the requirement is for the development of knife detection systems falling into either of the following two categories:

Theme 1 - A system that is fixed during operation and is capable of scanning a defined area (region) of space containing one or more subjects.

Theme 2 - A system that is capable of being carried and operated by a single user for at least the duration of a shift (8 hours)

1.8. You must define your goals in your application and outline your plan for phase 1.

In phase 1 we expect the development and delivery of a prototype at a minimum. This prototype must be ready for limited initial testing in a controlled environment to prove the concept (TRL4).

If you already have a prototype, your plan for this Phase 1 should include steps for further development to maximise system performance, and a clear route to testing in a controlled environment and an operational trial if appropriate (up to TRL6, activities bound by box in Figure 1).

Although solutions are not expected to meet all of the following by the end of phase 1, a fully commercialised product should meet the following requirements:

- The system must be safe to use and must not have any harmful effects on the user, subject or the wider public during and after operation
- The system must not have any adverse effect on communication devices, local infrastructure or body worn video cameras
- The system must be operationally resilient and able to withstand conditions encountered during routine policing duties
- The system must be auditable and record usage to allow scrutiny and review
- The system must give a self-diagnostic indication and warn the user of any faults

- The user or users must be provided with a distinct and discreet notification of the outcome of any scans (both positive and negative)

1.9. In addition to the above, a fixed system (Theme 1) will have to meet the following user requirements

- The user must be able to operate the system either remotely or from close proximity, with minimal or no interaction
- The user must be able to specify the start and end of the operation of the system during deployment

1.10. A portable system (Theme 2) will have to meet the following user requirements:

- The user must be able to carry and use the system individually (handheld or body worn)
- The user must be able to operate the device during an interaction with an individual or small group of people
- The user must be able to use the device with only a reasonable degree of compliance from the subject
- The user must be able to attribute alarms generated by the system to individual subjects
- The user shall be able to initiate a single detection event independently
- The user must be able operate the device at any time, without the need to wait until the system has sufficient charge to operate

1.11. You must provide a high-level, but credible and practical description of route to market, so your application must include an outline plan to commercialise your results. This can include involving one or more partner organisations to pursue commercialisation.

1.12. Specific themes

- Theme 1 - A system that is fixed during operation and is capable of scanning a defined area (region) of space containing one or more subjects.
- Theme 2 - A system that is capable of being carried and operated by a single user for at least the duration of a shift (8 hours)

1.13. Research categories

1.14. Phase 1: prototype development and evaluation

- 1.14.1. This can include prototyping, demonstrating, testing and validation of new or improved products or processes in environments representative of real-life operating conditions. The primary objective is to make further technical improvements on products or processes that are not substantially set.

Successful applicants will be expected to, at a minimum, demonstrate their prototype in a controlled environment following which, if appropriate, trials will take place to measure its performance by lab-based and operational trials. Initial, paper based feasibility studies (TRL1) and technology concepts (TRL2) are assumed to be completed prior to the commencement of this competition.

1.14.2. A potential Phase 2: further prototype development (pre-production)

This can include further operational trials, operational pilots, as well as further testing and validation of improvements or processes in environments representative of real-life operating conditions. The primary objective is to make further technical improvements on products, in order to make sure that a fully commercialised version will meet all requirements.

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS

Subject to the Contractor achieving the milestones, and submission of a valid and undisputed invoice in accordance with Clause 4, it is intended that the indicated amounts will be paid by the Authority to the Contractor within 30 days of a valid and undisputed invoice.

DOCUMENTS RELIED UPON

The Parties acknowledge and agree that the Authority has relied upon, and the Contractor shall undertake the Services in accordance with, the following documents:

- (i) the Contractor's application;
- (ii) the competition brief;

SECTION 7
GOVERNMENT FURNISHED ASSETS/INFORMATION

1. Government Furnished Assets/information

- 1.1 Any Government Furnished Equipment, Services, Facilities and Information (together referred to as Government Furnished Assets (GFA) supplied or to be supplied by the Authority to the Contractor under this Contract shall be recorded at Annex A to the Contract.
- 1.2 The GFA detailed at Annex A to the Contract shall be made available to the Contractor as Contract Support Items for the purposes of the Contract only and shall be returned to the Authority on completion of the Contract or when requested by the Authority.
- 1.3 The GFA List at Annex A to the Contract represents the identified GFA items as agreed between the Authority and Contractor at Contract signature or upon a variation. If the Contractor wishes the Authority to provide any further GFA which is not referred to in Annex A, he must give the Authority reasonable notice as is practicable in the circumstances and give details of his requirement. New requirements for GFA shall be subject to negotiation with the Authority. The Authority will endeavour to meet such requirements but there will be no obligation to do so. The GFA list will subsequently be revised to reflect the change via the Contract Amendment procedure.
