Spark DPS

Contract Example Response Guidance

You must demonstrate you have the necessary technical and professional experience to support customers to successfully improve through the deployment of new and/or emerging technologies for both or one of either Radical and Disruptive innovations.

Can you please provide one (1) contract example where your organisation can demonstrate the following key requirements:

► The Novelty

A new approach to a problem or product/intellectual property development that fits within our above described definitions of innovation (radical or disruptive).

► The Delivery

Tangible usefulness for the customer which could also be applied to other customers (the contract need not necessarily be with a public sector customer but you will need to demonstrate that you understand the potential future usefulness to the public sector).

► The Impact

Positive impacts of the innovation for the customer including all of the following areas: efficiency, effectiveness, better outcomes and increased satisfaction. In some circumstances there may be negative impacts within this, in which case the bidder should demonstrate how subsequent deployments could be improved.

► The Control

How the customer was given the appropriate rights to any relevant pre-existing intellectual property, either through ownership or licencing and how they have been protected from future exploitation (and these need to be explained).

Where the contract involved specially written intellectual property, you should explain how the customer was given control over this and how it can be reused within the public sector at no or minimal cost.

Contract examples may include:

- A contract funded by a government catalyst or similar that has been successful in developing a technology based product/service to meet a public sector need.
- A contract with a public sector body that was procured under an Innovation Partnership Procedure and has been successful in developing a technology based product/service to meet a public sector need.
- A proof of concept with a public sector customer for a novel technology based product or service to meet a public sector need.
- Any other contract, within the public or private sector, that involved the development of a novel technology based product and or service that could meet a public sector need.

Where the example is a private sector contract you will need to explain the potential use within the public sector.

In all of the above the suppliers will need to demonstrate how the example meet the four key requirements above (Novelty, Impact, Delivery, Control). i.e. was the problem centred, they developed a product, how the IPR is within their control.

► Radical Innovation

A new product, service, process or strategy introduced to a market, designed to make a significant impact by completely replacing existing technologies and methods. Effectively, it replaces the existing system or process with something entirely new. (e.g. starting as a mail-order video hire service and later providing on-demand streaming video).

► Disruptive Innovations

Creates a new market and value network and which may be independent of anything previously available or eventually disrupts an existing market and value network, displacing established market-leading firms, products, and alliances.
