SCHEDULE 1 – SPECIFICATION

1. Background

The scope of this project is to develop a tuberculin skin test that applies state-of-the-art 21st century technology to overcome limitations of the current tuberculin test format.

Concerns about the extant skin test protocols, developed in the 19th Century, include a lack of reproducibility and precision resulting from operator variation and subjective measurements, particularly at the low end of the induration reaction size spectrum; together with the necessity for repeated measurements that require additional handling of animals. To obviate these limitations, we here propose a proof-of-concept study to develop a skin test patch that combines microneedle-based delivery of skin test antigens, such as M. bovis-specific synthetic peptides or recombinant proteins with the ability to measure directly changes (including tissue biomarkers) associated with tuberculin delayed-type hypersensitivity.

Apart from overcoming the limitations set out above, the approach offers the possibility to reduce time to skin test reading as well as lower risk to operators and animals associated with the current practice of repeatedly using the same needles to test a number of animals.

The project has three (3) aims which are described below:

Aim 1: Optimization of skin test antigen delivery (PPD) to cattle via MN

Aim 2: Biomarker discovery to define in vivo tuberculin skin test reactions

Aim 3. Report preparation and submission. Develop future project to progress MN system towards practical tests

2. Objectives and Key Dates

The proposed study includes the following three (3) work packages;

Aims	PSU	Delivery dates
Aim 1: Optimization of skin test antigen delivery (peptides, PPD) to cattle via microneedles (MN)
Output: Practical microneedle antigen delivery system for cattle tuberculin testing
Aim 1.1. POC experiment to demonstrate suitability of antigen delivery via MN	Test microneedle prototype in skin explant model.	Sep-19
Aim 1.2: Optimization (e.g. antigen dose)_ of MN antigen delivery system	Test range of MN systems in skin explants and reactors in India for dose optimisation. Test optimized MN in reactor cattle (India) and uninfected controls and BCG vaccinated animals (India).	Oct-19
Aim 2: Biomarker discovery to define in vivo tuberculin skin test reactions
Output: Definition of biomarkers that could be combined with MN antigen delivery to improve read-out of responses to decrease subjectivity of reading tuberculin test.
Aim 2.1 Biomarker discovery studies	Test SMN in skin explants to select optimal format. Interstitial fluid proteomics and metabolomics. Once POC at APHA, test in reactors in India, PPD vs. Peptides; Biomarker discovery using interstitial fluids collected using proteomics and metabolomics	Jan-20
Aim 2.2: Analysis of pilot biomarker discovery studies	Continue proteomics and metabolomics studies on interstitial fluid samples. Complete data analysis.	Mar-20
Aim 3. Report preparation and submission. Develop future project to progress MN system towards practical tests
Aim 3.1 Report preparation and submission.		Jul-20
