Schedule 1: Services

1. PURPOSE

- 1.1 To join the Government Social Research (GSR) profession, members must pass a knowledge test which assesses whether or not they have the required social research knowledge and skills. The test is currently administered on paper, via email or via Capita. This creates inconsistency across departments, as well as significant difficulties in managing and delivering the test. GSR want to commission the development and management of a new online test platform to replace the existing paper based GSR knowledge test and be used as a sift tool in recruitment campaigns.

2. BACKGROUND TO THE CONTRACTING AUTHORITY

- 2.1 The GSR is the professional body for social researchers in the UK Civil Service. It champions social research in government, supporting social researchers and promoting the use of high-quality social research analysis in policymaking. GSR members provide analysis and insight in support of the entire range of UK Government and public service activities. The GSR is committed to becoming a community of greater diversity and inclusion, and to the core values of the Civil Service, integrity, honesty, objectivity and impartiality.
- 2.2 The commission of a new online test platform has been approved by the GSR Recruitment Sub Board, the GSR Board, and GESR Deputy Director. The GESR team provides central support to both the GES and GSR professions, managing recruitment services, other recruitment related activities, and strategic objectives. The goal of the commission is to make the sifting and badging processes for recruitment schemes less time consuming, more accurate, consistent, and fair.

3. BACKGROUND TO REQUIREMENT/OVERVIEW OF REQUIREMENT

- 3.1 The main purpose of the GSR online test is as a sift tool (i.e. applicants will take the test after submitting an application, and if they score highly enough, they will then go through to the next sift stage). The online test is sent to candidates immediately after they submit their written application (with a deadline of 3 days to complete it within one sitting) prior to the initial sift taking place. This allows recruiting managers to eliminate candidates who do not meet the pass mark for the test prior to moving to sifting of the written applications. and mitigate the risk of large numbers of candidates applying to practice taking the test/gaming the system/banking their score for future applications.
- 3.2 Additionally, the test will be used in departmental badging rounds, where existing civil servants who possess the required social research skills can join the profession, as well as for departmental recruitment of social researchers.
- 3.3 The online test is used to assess the social research technical skills of candidates. The skills to be assessed and the technical content of the tests will be provided by the GESR team – the requirement is solely for use of an appropriate online platform on which to administer the test.
- 3.4 The online test will help increase both efficiency in recruitment campaigns (e.g. time saving element for the sift) and help provide consistency and fairness across the GSR and departments.

 - 5.1.7 The tool should be able to automatically bank candidates' scores so we can see how many times an applicant may have applied and their previous scores and so that people don't have to retake the test unnecessarily. Scores should be stored for two years;
 - 5.1.8 Be available to candidates for completion for maximum 3 days – it must be completed by candidates in one sitting, with a 45 minute time limit;
 - 5.1.9 Ensure resilience to cheating, with potentially options to lock the browser or using other software or AI/large language models.
 - 5.1.10 Ensure accessibility, in particular for candidates who might need reasonable adjustments (e.g. ensuring formatting, colouring, question wording etc does not negatively impact certain groups) and can provide adjustments for people who need them (e.g. extending the 3-days window for people with special requirements);
 - 5.1.11 Questions will be provided by the GESR Team; however, these will need to be tested for suitability online and accessibility as part of this contract (we can provide a pool of GSR volunteers to test the questions and online test). Questions will be reviewed and updated (as necessary) periodically.
