3. What happens if you aren't insured

- 3.1 The Supplier shall not take any action or fail to take any action or (insofar as is reasonably within its power) permit anything to occur in relation to it which would entitle any insurer to refuse to pay any claim under any of the Insurances.
- 3.2 Where the Supplier has failed to purchase or maintain any of the Insurances in full force and effect, the Relevant Authority may elect (but shall not be obliged) following written notice to the Supplier to purchase the relevant Insurances and recover the reasonable premium and other reasonable costs incurred in connection therewith as a debt due from the Supplier.

4. Evidence of insurance you must provide

- 4.1 The Supplier shall upon the Start Date and within 15 Working Days after the renewal of each of the Insurances, provide evidence, in a form satisfactory to the Relevant Authority, that the Insurances are in force and effect and meet in full the requirements of this Schedule.

The Supplier shall use all reasonable endeavours to notify the Relevant Authority (subject to third party confidentiality obligations) as soon as practicable when it becomes aware of any relevant fact, circumstance or matter which has caused, or is reasonably likely to provide grounds to, the relevant insurer to give notice to cancel, rescind, suspend or void any insurance, or any cover or claim under any insurance in whole or in part.

7. Insurance claims

- 7.4 Where any Insurance is subject to an excess or deductible below which the indemnity from insurers is excluded, the Supplier shall be liable for such excess or deductible. The Buyer and the Supplier agree that, as a result of the operation of the Employment Regulations, where a Relevant Transfer occurs, the contracts of employment between the Supplier and the Transferring Supplier Employees (except in relation to any contract terms disapplied through operation of regulation 10(2) of the Employment Regulations) will have effect on and from the Service Transfer Date as if originally made between the Replacement Supplier and/or a Replacement Subcontractor (as the case may be) and each such Transferring Supplier Employee.

Annex 1- Key Roles

Order Schedule 20 (Order Specification)

This Schedule sets out the characteristics of the Deliverables that the Supplier will be required to make to the Buyers under this Order Contract

1. Background

There has been growing interest from lobbyists and stakeholders in requiring companies to provide information on how their activities impact on wider society; and how companies could be used to deliver societal change. For many, company success differs from the view that success could be measured by profits and that companies should be accountable to shareholders; instead, companies should consider success against a much broader range of metrics or goals: profits are made for a purpose and as a consequence companies should be accountable to a wider range of stakeholders e.g. employees, communities, environmental groups, etc.

This has led to companies being required, via the Companies Act, to provide non-financial reporting (NFR) information to allow stakeholders to assess a company's performance against several key areas. Whilst it is difficult, but feasible, to assess the costs for companies to produce this information, it is impossible to directly quantify the benefit to users given that the information is provided freely. In the absence of a market price for non-financial information, different techniques are required to estimate benefits.

NFR requirements apply to companies and the specific requirements depend on the company's size and whether the company is of public interest¹. NFR requirements are included in the company's strategic report, which is published alongside the company's annual accounts. Small companies² are not required to produce a strategic report and are therefore exempt from NFR requirements.

- Medium sized companies³ must provide a strategic report which contains a fair review of the company's business and a description of the principal risks and uncertainties facing the company. The review should be a balanced and comprehensive analysis of the development and performance of the business during the financial year, and the position of the business at the end of that year.
- Large companies must provide a strategic report that is similar to that provided by medium sized companies, except that the review must also contain analysis using financial key performance indicators and analysis using other key performance indicators, including information related to environmental matters and employee matters.

² Companies must meet at least 2 out of the 3 criteria to be classified as small: 1) annual turnover must be not more than £10.2 million, 2) the balance sheet total must be not more than £5.1 million, 3) the average number of employees must be not more than 50.

³ Companies are able to take advantage of the medium size exemptions if they meet at least 2 of the following conditions: 1) the annual turnover must be no more than £36 million, 2) the balance sheet total must be no more than £18 million, 3) the average number of employees must be no more than 250.

- Public Interest Entities, but not quoted, with more than 500 employees must provide a strategic report that is similar to that provided by large companies except that it must also contain non-financial information covering environmental matters (including the company's business impact on the environment), the company's employees, social matters, respect for human rights and anti-corruption and anti-bribery matters. The company must also set out its policies and principle risks relating to these matters and how it manages these risks.
- Public Interest Entities that are quoted and have more than 500 employees must provide a strategic report that is similar to that provided by unquoted Public Interest Entities except that it must contain additional information related to the business review, community matters, company strategy and business model and the gender breakdown of directors, senior managers and other staff.
- A quoted company which is not a Public Interest Entity must provide a strategic report similar to that of a medium sized company except that it must contain additional information related to the business review, environmental matters, social, community and human rights matters, company strategy and business model and the gender breakdown of directors, senior managers and other staff.

All large companies are also required to produce a Section 172 statement which describes how the Directors have had regard to the matters set out in section 172 (1)(a) to (f) of the Companies Act when performing their duty⁴ under section 172 (1).

Investors are seen as an important group driving non-financial reporting disclosures as they perceive NFR activity by preparers as a sign that preparers are engaging in risk management activity⁵.

For example, the "logic model" for non-financial reporting assumes that⁶:

- Users receive relevant and useful NFR information,
- Users better understand non-financial risks, and some decisions, e.g. investment decisions, change in scope, timing or scale, as a result of this information; and results in
- More informed investment, business or other decisions that lead to better social outcomes.

⁴ A director of a company must act in the way he considers, in good faith, would be most likely to promote the success of the company for the benefit of its members as a whole, and in doing so have regard (amongst other matters) to: (a) the likely consequences of any decision in the long term, (b) the interests of the company's employees, (c) the need to foster the company's business relationships with suppliers, customers and others, (d) the impact of the company's operations on the community and the environment, (e) the desirability of the company maintaining a reputation for high standards of business conduct, and (f) the need to act fairly as between members of the company.

https://assets.publishing.service.gov.uk/government/uploads/system/uploads/attachment_data/file/841047/stakeholder-perceptions-of-non-financial-reporting.pdf see page 11.

At the heart of the logic model is a belief that investors should be using NFR to make better investments. This is also reflected in mission and other statements made by organisations that seek to foster a wider purpose within business, for example:

- The Purposeful Company claim to have evidence that companies that deliver value to their material stakeholders also generate superior long term returns to investors.
- B Corp's theory of change works toward a world where business is a force for good and transforms the global economy into a more inclusive, equitable, and regenerative system.
- The Coalition for Inclusive Capitalism states Inclusive Capitalism is fundamentally about creating long-term value that benefits all stakeholders – businesses, investors, employees, customers, governments, communities, members of society, and the planet.

Therefore, the NFR “narrative” places those that make investments, i.e. investors who are mainly intermediaries, as the agents by which social outcomes would be transformed by NFR.

The recent NFR Post Implementation Review covering The Companies, Partnerships and Groups (Accounts and Non-Financial Reporting) Regulations 2016 consolidated anecdotal insights from various stakeholders on the value of NFR information. It concluded that although NFR information is somewhat achieving the policy objectives by providing more information to the market, there are still some challenges which should be addressed. It was also unable to quantify the benefits of NFR, which made it impossible to compare the burden of the regulation against the benefits, including the perceived benefits for investors.⁷ The Regulatory Policy Committee (RPC), the independent body who critically appraise the evidence and analysis of government impact assessments and evaluations, in its assessment of the PIR suggested that we continue to develop the analysis on the benefits of this measure, particularly for investors, for a future PIR.

The aim of this research is to assess the assumption that those who make investment decisions place a positive, and significant, value on NFR, and on what NFR in particular. The research will also consider direct and indirect channels for generating value. For example, NFR may add value directly through better risk management and lower costs; or indirectly through a better brand, which people are willing to pay more to “buy” into.

2. Aims and Objectives of the Project

There are two main objectives of this study:

1. To test the assumptions on benefits of NFR information to those who make investment decisions, as outlined in the “logic model”
2. To assess the economic value of NFR information, and in particular, different elements of NFR

To achieve these objectives, BEIS propose adopting a two-pronged approach using both qualitative and quantitative approaches.

To achieve the first objective, the contractor will need to identify a population of investors and conduct qualitative engagement to better understand how investors are using non-financial information and the benefits of disclosure. This will be the first step in providing greater context for the quantitative research to follow.

To achieve the second objective, and following the qualitative engagement exercise, BEIS propose adopting a quantitative approach which uses survey methods and/or econometric methods to estimate the benefits of NFR. Bidders will be required in their bids to set out their preferred valuation approach; their reasons for it; the data and techniques they propose to use and the risks, and associated mitigations.

In summary, BEIS propose the following steps:

1. Identify a population of investors that use NFR data;
2. Draw a sample and conduct qualitative engagement to understand the value of non-financial information;
3. Identify the attributes of non-financial reporting that are most valuable to investors;
4. Design the most appropriate valuation models, gather data and carry out qualitative analysis;
5. Estimate the total monetary or other value of NFR to investors;
6. Estimate the value of different elements of NFR. Our expectation would be that the elements of NFR would map onto regulatory requirements;
7. Identify what determines the value to investors; identify whether those investors with low, to be defined, valuations have clear and distinct characteristics from other groups.

The population of interest for this research is investors. The group of investors should be representative of the market and include a mix of active and passive investors⁸. See the section below for more information on population of interest.

Potential contractors should also address the following in their bids.

Step 1: identify a population of investors that use NFR data

BEIS will expect the contractor to identify a population of interest, namely investors who use a non-financial information. This will require an initial screening question to understand whether investors understand how non-financial information is defined and if they use disclosures by companies.

Investors are a heterogeneous group, made up of retail and institutional investors, hedge fund managers, pension fund managers and the like. However, we are primarily interested in institutional investors and fund managers for two main reasons; 1) when looking at the ownership breakdown of shareholdings, only a small proportion of shares are held by private/retail investors, most are held by institutional investors, 2) BEIS have already conducted some research which was published in 2020 which took account of retail investor views.⁹ Annex 1 provides a list of job roles to help the contractor to define who would qualify as an investor in scope of this research, but in summary, there should be a broad representation across investment funds, other non-financial corporations, banks, households, insurance corporations or pension fund managers, as well as the inclusion of both passive and active investors.

As this research will have a core survey element (discussed further in step 3) we will need to ensure we have a sufficient pool from which to draw samples from. We suspect to achieve the sample size required, particularly for the survey element of this study, we will need to draw on a research/consumer panel. BEIS have identified at least one research panel who could potentially provide the sample – Research in Finance¹⁰. They are able to offer up to 15,000 professional investors, 5,000 private investors and retail/asset managers (including fund of a fund manager and portfolio managers). We have engaged with the panel provider who have stated they can achieve around a 60% response rate. We expect the contractor to outline the pros and cons of using a panel as a sampling frame, and if preferred, propose alternative approaches (or panels) to sampling.

We expect contractors to consider how respondents will be contacted and invited to participate in this study, what incentives might be employed to improve engagement, and how survey burden will be managed.

Step 2: Draw a sample and conduct depth qualitative engagement to understand the value of non-financial information

We have discussed generating a large pool of respondents for the survey, however, ahead of the quantitative element, we would like to conduct some early qualitative engagement. The purpose of these interviews is to gain an initial view on the factors that influence use of non-financial information, and which aspects are most useful. In essence, BEIS want to test the logic behind the NFR regulatory regime.

Prior to 2016 regulations, investors amongst other stakeholders, were not finding the NFR information as useful as it could be, especially in the context of informing investment decisions. The intention of the regulations were to require companies to gather more useful, simplified, comparable information. It was expected that this information would allow for a better understanding of financial risks and the implications of financial decisions. This would ultimately lead to more informed investment, business and other decision, ultimately improving social outcomes. The core questions to be covered in the qualitative engagement are as follows:

⁹ https://www.eunomia.co.uk/case_study/informing-government-thinking-on-non-financial-reporting/

¹⁰ <https://researchinfinance.co.uk/products-services/panels-and-data/>

- How is NFR information being used?
 - Do investors read NFR disclosures?
 - How does use of NFR disclosures vary by investor type?
 - Are disclosures used to assess the financial risks and long-term value of the company?
 - Does NFR information have a key role in decision making?
- Do investors find the information easily accessible for use?
 - Is it comparable across companies of interest?
- How do investors rate the importance of NFR disclosures compared to other information e.g. financial accounts.
 - Are some disclosures more important than others?
- How important are NFR disclosures compared to other factors that influence a decision to invest? E.g., does this information play a decisive role in whether to invest or not?

These results will aid in the design of the empirical research as well supplement the empirical findings and give a rounded view on motivations and reasons for use.

We expect the results from this stage to be summarized in a short paper, including the key findings, the limitations of the research, and recommendations on how to proceed to the next stage. At this point, we would like the contractor to reflect on the feasibility of the next phase of research considering factors like investor engagement and ability to either generate a large enough sample to achieve robust results or whether the proposed methodological approach will deliver the research objectives. A break clause should be included in the contract at this point if it is determined that the next phase cannot go ahead. As it is not ideal for break clauses to be invoked, BEIS will, in considering bids, consider the riskiness of bidders proposed approaches. Bidders should therefore set out where their preferred approach to the quantitative element of the research has been successfully used before; and whether there are any risks, and mitigations, for using the method in this project. Particular attention should be paid here to whether the proposed minimum sample sizes can be achieved, the risks around this and how they will be mitigated.

Sampling

We propose a minimum of 30 virtual/tele-depth interviews with a broad mix of investors (across investor types). The interviews should be semi-structured in design and broadly cover the reasons for using the information, the perceived benefits, wider attitudes and experience of non-financial reporting.

The contractor should design the topic guides in consultation with BEIS, which should be cognitively tested before the mainstage fieldwork (further guidance on testing below).

Step 3: Design the most appropriate valuation method including any survey element and gather data

We require the contractor to value the different attributes that underpin NFR. Bidders should set out in their bid their approach to determining attributes that might be valued by investors. This might be by coming up with a long list of attributes which would be shortened during the course of the research. The long-list should be achieved through a review of existing research and informed by discussions with BEIS.¹¹ Following the qualitative exercise, we would like the contractor to determine the best approach to valuing non-financial information amongst investors. In theory, there are two potential approaches to adopt in order to do this:

A stated preference approach: this would involve designing a stated preference survey (a “choice task”) covering one or more stated preference approaches. The core of the survey would be questions which invite trade off behaviour between different attributes.¹² This would be achieved through forcing choices between different attributes. We expect that a significant proportion of the scoping time will be occupied by establishing what are appropriate attributes. As mentioned above, there are number of NFR requirements across the regulatory landscape that we would want covered in this research, which cut across multiple NFR themes. Bidders should consider in their bids whether it would be desirable to include at least one financial reporting attribute in the attribute set to provide an accurate valuation of NFR attributes. The challenge with this approach is it can be subject to “cheap talk” (investors stating they are willing to pay more than they would in reality) which can have implications on the validity of the results. The contractor should outline appropriate safeguards against this. Although stated preference is the approach we envisioned being adopted, we are open to alternative suggestions, such as revealed preference.

A revealed preference approach: as a method this would involve determining the value that investors hold for NFR information by observing their behaviour in a market. However, there is no “product market” so there is no market price for non-financial information (as it does not cost investors anything to have access to this information – it is provided freely by companies due to government regulation). However, there are other markets and NFR information could be embodied within the values of different stocks that are traded on markets. For example, using econometric methods which look for a relationship between market capitalisation and varying qualities of NFR disclosures.

Such an approach may present challenges, if using market capitalization, this would only cover listed company obligations (who by virtue of being listed have greater and more rigorous reporting obligations). There is also the challenge of assessing what is “good quality” reporting. One potential approach to determining quality could be through the reporting framework¹³ being used for disclosures. If contractors are suggesting this approach, we would expect them to address how they would mitigate against these challenges, whether alternative dependent variables might be used other than market capitalization, what control variables would be employed, and what data is available for the modelling. We require bidders to set out how this approach would achieve granularity, robustness, reliability and why it should be favoured over other approaches.

¹¹ There are a number of NFR requirements, which require companies of different size and types to disclose different types of NFR information. We would expect the contractor to advise on the best approach for designing attributes. We would propose this is done by themes rather than by requirement/regulation. BEIS can provide material that will aid in the scoping.

¹² We expect the contractor to determine by using the results from step 2, alongside other background material provided by BEIS on NFR requirements and themes).

¹³ The Eunomia research on non financial reporting frameworks identified 13 widely used frameworks out of a possible 400. https://www.eunomia.co.uk/case_study/informing-government-thinking-on-non-financial-reporting/. The contractor would have to identify which framework/s could be considered as producing the best and poor “quality” information.

Sampling

Where a stated preference approach is pursued, previous experience suggests that the contractor would adopt a stratified sampling approach, with two main stratas on the different types of investors – active and passive investors. Within each strata we would expect random sampling to ensure reasonable representation. However, we could adopt “soft” quotas so that we do not exceed the number of investors with any single characteristic. We would suggest a minimum of 250 respondents per characteristic, so a total of 1,500 respondents in total if there are 6 characteristics in the willingness to pay experiment. We would welcome contractor views on this figure, as well as whether we should adopt additional stratas for broader representation. Previously an on-line willingness to pay survey, carried out for BEIS targeting users of CH data, achieved a response rate of between 8% - 20% which might give an indication of our starting sample. However, we understand that the Research in Finance panel can achieve response rates of up to 60%.

Ensuring meaningful responses

Where a willingness to pay approach is proposed, bidders should set out how they intend to achieve meaningful survey responses and whether respondents are providing meaningful responses. This should include adding questions to and using:

- Cognitive testing, e.g. 10 in depth telephone interviews in multiple rounds
- Piloting the survey, e.g. 50-100 responses achieved
- Main survey, e.g. balance of responses achieved.

Where the contractor intends to use piloting and cognitive surveys, they should set out the number and mode of these interviews. They should also set out how they plan to disseminate the findings from testing.

In addition, where applicable, cognitive testing, pilot and main surveys should test the validity of survey responses and the experiment. For example, it should gather data/or use methods to test for significant endowment effects; and test whether the approach suitably captures individual attitudes and value towards value of non-financial reporting. The successful contractor would be expected to set out in their bid how they proposed to overcome biases in the results including: anchoring and incentives to reveal.

Where other approaches are proposed, bidders should set out the tests they propose to undertake to ensure that the results are meaningful.

Step 4 – 7: Model building and estimating valuations

Once the key attributes (and varying characteristics within attributes) have been identified, we require the contractor to develop well specified models to estimate values for key attributes. The contractor should set out the models they would estimate and their pros and cons. They should also set out how the valuations will be estimated from the models.

Bidders should set out how results could be aggregated to the population of investors¹⁴.

Quality Assurance and Peer Review

The contractor would be expected to review intermediate outputs with an expert practitioner who has not been involved in project delivery, share the findings with BEIS and act upon the feedback. The contractor should set aside resource for BEIS to contact the peer reviewer directly to discuss any feedback.

Contractors should set out how their Quality Assurance (QA) processes are compliant with BEIS QA guidelines - <https://www.gov.uk/government/collections/quality-assurance-tools-and-guidance-in-decc>.

Quality standards in research

This research will be subject to the rigorous standards of design, analysis, reporting and documentation as set out in the Market Research Society (MRS) and GSR codes of conduct. We expect contractors to adhere to the following GSR Principals:

- Sound application and conduct of social research methods and appropriate dissemination and utilisation of findings
- Participation based on valid consent
- Enabling participation
- Avoidance of personal harm
- Non-disclosure of identity and personal information

Data, Analysis and Synthesis

Bidders should be aware that the data is owned by BEIS, and that we would like the anonymised data from transcripts, survey instrument to be provided. We would expect the contractor to triangulate the findings from both phases of the project and to set out how they intend to bring together the evidence from these various sources (e.g., the qualitative interviews and survey), and how they will make sense of any contradictory evidence.

Reporting

We expect the contractor to present the findings to relevant policy and analytical colleagues before providing BEIS with a final research report. The contractor should provide a presentation and report outline which BEIS will comment on and approve before final materials are produced.

Data Security

It is important that the data is processed in a correct and secure manner; that appropriate technical and organisational measures are in place to protect against unauthorised or unlawful processing of, accidental loss of, destruction of, or damage to, this data. We would expect the contractor to maintain the anonymity of respondents in any public
