All negotiations connected with the dispute shall be conducted in confidence and without prejudice to the rights of the Parties in any further proceedings.

- 20.3 If the Parties fail to appoint a Mediator within one month, or fail to enter into a written agreement resolving the dispute within one month of the Mediator being appointed, either Party may exercise any remedy it has under applicable law.

21 GENERAL

Introduction

Eco-labels can guide environmentally conscientious customers to select products and services based on trustworthy environmental and social criteria. This informs purchasing decisions by providing information on environmental footprint of how the products have been manufactured and produced, which is often opaque and complex due to global supply chains. It remains challenging to make sustainable purchase decisions for most of customers.

To date, there are currently no internationally agreed standards for environmental sustainability labelling, and with around 460 eco labels globally there is a growing need for a consistency framework informed by environmental science data to help customers to understand genuinely environmentally friendly products¹. In addition, there is no agreed measures of product sustainability, e.g., greenhouse gas emission, water use and biodiversity impact etc². As such, the Chief Scientific Officer at Food Standard Agency (FSA) has recently urged an urgent introduction to an eco-labelling system through collaboration between business, academia and government, so that the food system can be set on a path to sustainability. He explained “Transforming the food system into one that is fully sustainable relies on a unified approach to data sharing and food labelling that is both transparent and accurate. The eco-labelling of foods, for example, can enable consumers to compare the environmental footprint of different products and enable them to make choices about the impact this has on their diet. This requires unprecedented level of collaboration between business, academia and government. Developing a single (eco-label) system will require close coordination between business, an enhanced assurance capability for regulators and expert input from behaviour science to be sure the end product is clearly and accurately understood by consumers”. He highlighted “there is a golden opportunity now for businesses to work together with each other and the public sector in order to create a coherent voluntary scheme that can be easily morphed into a mandatory one in due course”.³ A mandatory food nutrient label has helped to drive business changes (e.g., reformulation) and made it easier for public to make better informed food choices.

In fact, urgent progress on a unified eco-labelling system is also needed for other business sectors to help prevent greenwashing⁴, achieve Net Zero legislation by 2050, support UK’s clean growth and maintain our planetary health. For instance, the EU’s new strategy for sustainable and circular textiles will help empower consumers by providing clearer information on textiles.⁵ In addition, Henkel, L’Oréal, LVMH, Natura &Co, and Unilever announce a new global collaboration to co-develop an industry-wide environmental impact assessment and scoring system for cosmetics products. The aim is to co-design an approach that is brand-agnostic, and which provides consumers with clear, transparent and comparable environmental impact information, based on a common science-based methodology.⁶ The UK’s Net Zero Strategy published in October 2021 also contains a number of ambitions around product labelling as part of the commitment to empower businesses and the public to make green choices.

UKRI NERC is seeking experts to carry out a study to review the research and innovation landscape related to sector agnostic eco-labels with a focus on environmental science, to analyse the market and systems (e.g. challenges and drivers, market failures and barriers to change) and to recommend research and innovation gaps and opportunities to overcome challenges and enable change.⁷

NERC is particularly interested in identifying research and innovation gaps where environmental science can inform the development of a unified eco-label system to provide trustworthy information to help public to make purchasing decisions genuinely better for the environment and to drive rapid improvements for environmental sustainability, either directly or as a framework for wider interdisciplinary research, which would contribute towards a new whole-systems approach in this area, e.g., development of sector specific or agnostic eco-labels. To that end, it should involve literature review, horizon scanning and broader foresight methodologies and stakeholder engagement to secure commitment to collaborate.

Aims & Objectives

This report is intended to inform the scoping of a prospective pre-competitive research and innovation programme for eco-labelling, either tailored to a specific sector or frameworks for broader business and industry, with a particular emphasis on understanding the potential contribution of the environmental sciences to address the business and/or policy challenges in a multi/interdisciplinary and whole-systems approach.

Objectives

Objective 1: Stakeholder engagement and a synthesis of existing findings from public, private, academic and others in relation to eco-labels to:

- 1.1 summarise key findings particularly systems drivers, market failures, barriers to change, opportunities, key stakeholders (including their roles and contribution) and untapped potential for necessary public funding to enable the development of a unified and consistent eco-labelling framework and system, benefiting from environmental science. Research questions to cover include but are not limited to:
 - What are consumers' attitudes/preferences towards eco-labels?
 - How successful have existing eco-label trials been?
 - What are the key factors contributing to their success or failure?
 - What potential is there for future eco-labels to be successful?
- 1.2 understand the longer-term trend assumptions that underpin the support for and development of eco-labels for customer information, to inform how the design of a prospective UKRI programme might anticipate/mitigate these.

Output 1.1: Analysis of key market failures and drivers in relation to achieving unified eco-labels for business to inform customers, and how current environmental research and innovation maps to these:

- Particularly highlighting gaps where environmental science research is not currently trying to address said market failures/there is an opportunity to do so;

- Particularly highlighting areas where pre-competitive opportunities exist which can be addressed through environmental science in a multi/inter-disciplinary and whole-systems approach;
- Key stakeholders and how they contribute to the development and rolling out of eco-labels .

Output 1.2: An overview of emerging environmental, political, social or technological trends that may impact the development of a consistent environmental science informed eco-labelling framework and system over the longer-term.⁸

- Including potential headwinds and tailwinds/disruptors in the achievement of this goal;
- With an articulation of how the design of a prospective UKRI programme might anticipate/mitigate these.

Deliverables: The supplier must provide weekly updates on progress against this objective with interim reports submitted in January 2023 and final reports including an executive summary (a maximum of two pages), a summary report (a maximum of five pages) and outputs (such as a presentation set, supporting documents and raw data) submitted by end of February 2023.

Objective 2: A landscape analysis to map eco-label research and innovation portfolio, funded by public (including but not limited to UKRI), private and third sector, validated by engagement with key stakeholders to provide:

- 2.1 a detailed understanding of the current state of UK environmental research capacity in the area of eco-labels for customer information, to identify strengths that can be built upon or can be directly transferred or applied to eco-labels across any business sector, as well as the gaps which need further disciplinary capacity - and interdisciplinary community-building embedding environment research questions.
- 2.2 an alignment of current research activity with industrial barriers and market failures in the area of eco-labelling and customer information, to inform where necessary UKRI support involving environmental science could mitigate these and accelerate the transition to a unified and consistent eco-labelling system, contributing towards the transition to a more sustainable paradigm. Recommendations on the specific research areas (and associated research and innovation questions, both multi-/inter-disciplinary and environmental science focused) and types of necessary intervention (e.g. research, training, infrastructure) that are needed, which in turn might shape prospective UKRI research programme(s) with a particular emphasis on potential environmental-science driven solutions.
- 2.3 an overarching mechanism and logic model by which a prospective UKRI research programme in this area could deliver tangible benefits to the UK, to inform a business case for investment.

Output 2.1: A Landscape report mapping research activity directly related and/or transferrable to eco-labels, e.g.:

- Overall research investment from public (including but not limited to UKRI family), private and third sector;
- Other major investments (including capital and digital);
- Recent activity and/or advances that future funding in this area might build upon;
- Key pre-competitive research and innovation gaps and prioritised opportunities.

Output 2.2: A summary of the environmental science research areas (and associated research questions) and types of intervention (e.g. programme funding, pump-priming pilots, training programmes) which, if supported, could help transform eco-labelling across business sectors, aligning to market drivers and failures:

- Informed by the unique capabilities and/or the research base in the UK;

⁸ This may be informed by traditional horizon scanning and/or other 'Futures' methodologies (as exemplified here)

- With an articulation of why such an intervention/area would be particularly timely or strategic for UKRI, i.e. what happens if UK or UKRI do nothing;
- Outlining how this would benefit UK business and society, and what the spill overs are.

Output 2.3: A logic model or theory of change to illustrate how UKRI investment⁹ in recommended areas (as outlined in objective 3) would deliver tangible benefits to the UK¹⁰, taking into account any environmental, social, political changes (e.g. Britain's exist of the EU), and associated opportunities to facilitate a green recovery from the pandemic. This should include a focus on the role and purpose of eco-labelling in the journey to net zero and should explore which metrics and indicators eco-labels should use/display – e.g. beyond carbon emissions, also biodiversity, water usage etc.

Deliverables: The supplier must provide weekly updates on progress against this objective with interim reports submitted in January 2023 and final reports including an executive summary (a maximum of two pages), a summary report (a maximum of six pages) and outputs (such as a presentation set, supporting documents and raw data) submitted by end of February 2023

Objective 3: Stakeholder engagement to validate deliverables of Objectives 1 and 2, to secure sector and key stakeholders' buy-in.

Deliverables: The supplier must provide weekly updates on progress against this objective with interim reports submitted in January 2023 and final reports including an executive summary (a maximum of two pages), a summary report (a maximum of five pages), a summary presentation and all contact detailers of all stakeholders interviewed or engaged and associated interview and meeting notes submitted by end of February 2023.

Scope

Within scope:

- Sector agnostic eco-labelling, validated by research, to inform customer purchasing decisions and drive environmental sustainability and business clean growth.
- The initial focus should be across the full spectrum of sector agnostic eco-labelling, with possible further narrowing down to focused business sectors based on justification and selection criteria agreed by NERC throughout the process.
- Through a systems lens with a focus on the environmental economics and sectors' environmental impact throughout the entire supply chain.
- UK-focused but contextualised against international stakeholders and the entire supply chain within and outside of the UK.

Some aspects of the scope above may be flexible; contingent on whether the supplier can make a convincing case during the course of the project that a given aspect must be within scope to deliver a whole-systems approach. It is expected that this project will be delivered through a mix of desk-based research and stakeholder engagement. UKRI is open to tenders that offer innovative suggestions. Given the wide scope of the specification, UKRI are open to consortium, multi-supplier bids.
