SPECIFICATION

THE SPECIFICATION, INCLUDING PROJECT TIMETABLE AND EVALUATION OF TENDERS

GENERAL INTRODUCTION

The Food Standards Agency is an independent Government department working across England, Wales and Northern Ireland to protect public health and consumers wider interest in food. We make sure food is safe and what it says it is.

The Agency is committed to openness, transparency and equality of treatment to all suppliers. As well as these principles, for science projects the final project report will be published on the Food Standards Agency website (www.food.gov.uk). For science projects we will encourage contractors to publish their work in peer reviewed scientific publications wherever possible. Also, in line with the Government's Transparency Agenda which aims to encourage more open access to data held by government, the Agency is developing a policy on the release of underpinning data from all of its science- and evidence-gathering projects. Data should be made freely available in an accessible format, as fully and as promptly as possible.

Consideration should be given to data management as new contracts are being negotiated. Resource implications for this should be taken into account. The mechanism for publishing underpinning data should allow the widest opportunity for to enable its re-use. Where possible, underpinning data should be included in the final project report. Where data are included in the final report in pdf format, they should also be published separately in a format that can be used for further analysis. Large data sets can be provided separately in an annex to the report, and published, where possible, alongside the final report online. Where it is more appropriate to publish underpinning data in an existing database, archive, repository or other community resource, or for data to be saved in a specialist proprietary format, information will be provided on how the data can be accessed. There will be some circumstances where release of data may need to be restricted or anonymised for reasons of commercial and/or personal sensitivities.

Schedule 2

SPECIFICATION

The FSA strategy sets out our vision to ensure that the UK food system is safe, and is what it says it is. This involves building our scientific capability through conducting research and development for analytical methods, and undertaking knowledge transfer with UK Official Laboratories, to ensure that we have a resilient laboratory network to test food reliably and consistently.

An estimated two million people living in the UK have been diagnosed with a food allergy. Through the Food Hypersensitivity programme, the FSA aims to improve the quality of life of these people and to help them to make safe and informed choices to effectively manage risk. This work informs policy so that food businesses can implement best practice in terms of allergen information provision¹.

To support this, the FSA is carrying out a procurement exercise to contract a supplier to review the potential for allergenicity of novel food products containing alternative proteins, and to assess current methods for the detection of allergens within them.

A. THE SPECIFICATION

Background

Technological advances have allowed for the development of novel foods with the potential to address challenges facing our food production system, such as the increasing global population and the environmental impact of livestock production. There is a need to understand that these innovative food products are safe, through building our knowledge of novel food processes and exploring detection techniques to understand the nature of these products and to provide support for enforcement as needed. Food businesses have a legal responsibility to provide food that is safe, which includes declaring allergens present as ingredients and warning consumers about their potential unintended presence due to cross-contamination².

¹ Food hypersensitivity | Food Standards Agency

² Novel and non-traditional foods, additives and processes | Food Standards Agency

Schedule 2

SPECIFICATION

The aim of this project is to provide an overview of the reliability, feasibility, and limitations of routine analytical methods, such as commonly used ELISA test kits, for the detection of regulated allergens in novel foods containing alternative proteins. This will focus on alternative proteins produced by precision fermentation and insect proteins, which are expected to be included in an increasing range of food products within the coming decade³.

Precision fermentation involves the use of microorganisms to biosynthesise specific ingredients, such as proteins, which can be used in food production in place of animal derived products, for example milk and egg⁴. It is not known if current analytical methods can detect allergens in precision fermented products.

Insects are another alternative protein source of increasing popularity in the West, however there have been some cases where allergic reactions have been triggered in patients sensitised to shellfish (crustacea and molluscs), upon consumption of foods containing insect species. This is thought to be due to cross-reactivity between proteins found in shellfish and insects, such as tropomyosin, arginine kinase, larval cuticle proteins and paramyosin⁵. It is not known if currently available methods of analysis for shellfish allergens can also detect these similar proteins in insects.

There is a lack of publicly available and up to date information/data on kit validation and performance. Therefore experimental work is required to assess the suitability of current kits/methods for the detection of allergens in alternative proteins.

The outcome of the review will inform us on the availability of reliable analytical methods for allergen detection in novel foods containing precision fermented protein or insect protein. This will in turn equip FSA with the required knowledge to respond to enquiries and incidents involving allergens in novel foods containing alternative proteins, which could increase as these products grow in popularity. The outcome of the review will also be of use to Public Analysts and Official Laboratories and could form the basis of future knowledge transfer and training activities to improve capability in this area.

The Specification

Applicants are invited to provide a review of the potential for allergenicity of novel food products containing alternative proteins, focusing on products produced by precision fermentation and those containing insect protein, and of the capability of current analytical methods/kits for the detection and quantification of associated allergens within them.

Project Outputs

The project should include the following:

1. A review of available literature to assess the potential for allergenicity of novel food alternative proteins, focusing on precision fermented proteins (e.g. milk, egg) and insect protein, including a review of potential cross-reactivity between shellfish and insect proteins.
2. Engagement with industry stakeholders to gather opinions on the topic of allergens in novel food alternative proteins (particularly precision fermented proteins and insect proteins), and gain information on existing testing routines for final products and ingredients, manufacturing conditions and any issues/challenges.
3. Experimental work sourcing and testing precision fermented and insect protein food ingredients/products with a range of test kits/methods for the detection of associated allergens.

Schedule 2

SPECIFICATION

4. Assessment of the performance of the test kits/methods, considering factors such as sensitivity/selectivity, LOD/LOQ, cross reactivities, etc., and an assessment of costs.
5. Discussion of the main findings and conclusions, highlighting and discussing any gaps, issues or challenges and limitations.
6. Recommendations for further work.

Deliverables

Deliverable 1: An interim report consisting of the literature review.

Deliverable 2: An interim report consisting of the outputs of the stakeholder engagement.

Deliverable 3: A draft final report combining the interim report with the findings of the experimental work, conclusions, and recommendations (submitted by mid-February 2024).

Deliverable 4: A revised final report, following feedback (submitted by mid-March 2024).

The contractor will be expected to keep the FSA up to date on project progress throughout, e.g. monthly status reports, project meetings and submission of draft reports for feedback as appropriate, and should provide written evidence of completed deliverables in order for any associated payments to be made.

Usually reports require at least one round of substantive comments by FSA officials (and any other parties involved in the project as appropriate). Unless otherwise agreed, the project manager will co-ordinate comments and provide them to the contractor and all responses will be recorded. The final report will also be subject to external peer review, following which further amendments may be required. Contractors should agree the timetable for reporting and publication with the project officer but should note that FSA normally expect two weeks to provide a co-ordinated response per round of substantive comments. Please confirm in your proposal how you will meet FSA's requirements for reporting.

Schedule 2

SPECIFICATION

Format

All reports must be formatted in line with FSA accessibility guidelines – the most up to date version of which should be checked prior to writing the report. They must be submitted in Microsoft Word format. These requirements additionally include (but are not limited to):

- Use a sans serif font (for example Arial), with a minimum font size of 12 points
- Use left aligned text, not justified
- Avoid chunks of italicised or capitalised text
- Only use underlines to indicate links
- Use standard bullets for lists
- Use styles and headings to structure your content, and ensure these are in the right order (for example, in Microsoft Word, heading 1 followed by heading 2)
- Ensure that all tables are simple (no split/merged cells) and have column and row headers

Each Party will, at the request and cost of the other Party, do all things which may be reasonably necessary to give effect to the meaning of this Contract.

37. Resolving disputes

- 37.1 If there is a dispute between the Parties, their senior representatives who have authority to settle the dispute will, within 28 days of a written request from the other Party, meet in good faith to resolve the dispute by commercial negotiation.

- 37.6 The Supplier cannot suspend the performance of the Contract during any dispute.
