- (a) terminate the Contract and recover from the Supplier the amount of any loss suffered by UKRI resulting from the termination, including the cost reasonably incurred by UKRI of making other arrangements for the supply of the Goods and/or Services and any additional expenditure incurred by UKRI throughout the remainder of the Contract; or
 - (b) recover in full from the Supplier any other loss sustained by UKRI in consequence of any breach of this clause.

21 DISPUTE RESOLUTION

- 21.1 The Parties shall attempt in good faith to negotiate a settlement to any dispute between them arising out of or in connection with the Contract and such efforts shall involve the escalation of the dispute to an appropriately senior representative of each Party.
- 21.2 If the dispute cannot be resolved by the Parties within one month of being escalated as referred to in clause 21.1, the dispute may by agreement between the Parties be referred to a neutral adviser or mediator (the "Mediator") chosen by agreement between the Parties. All negotiations connected with the dispute shall be conducted in confidence and without prejudice to the rights of the Parties in any further proceedings.
- 21.3 If the Parties fail to appoint a Mediator within one month, or fail to enter into a written agreement resolving the dispute within one month of the Mediator being appointed, either Party may exercise any remedy it has under applicable law.

22 GENERAL

its obligations under the Contract, and that the Contract is executed by its duly authorised representative.

Specification – Schedule 2

- 1 The Suppliers shall provide the Services in accordance with this Schedule 2.

1. Background

Overview

UKRI are seeking a supplier to investigate the potential for a professional development programme for people involved in community engagement with research. We want to support the development of skills, knowledge and practice in individuals who can lead community engagement with research and engaged research involving or co-produced with communities. We want to establish a cohort of change-makers, bringing together people from across sectors and across professional roles, to build capacity for more embedded, effective and equitable involvement of communities in research and innovation. This is one part of a programme of activities UKRI is planning around building long-term capacity for supporting communities across the UK to play an active role in the research and innovation system.

The supplier will first undertake scoping research to understand the context for making investments in this area and identify the types of investment that are most needed. The supplier will then co-design an approach with key stakeholders. The findings from this project will inform UKRI's decisions about the development of a professional development programme and the wider investments it makes in public engagement programmes. The project should be completed by June 2022.

Background

UKRI wishes to commission scoping research and co-design of an approach which will inform the development of a professional development programme for people involved in community engagement with research and innovation. This will allow us to discover which types of interventions are most valuable to achieve our ambitions in supporting professional development around community engagement, to identify which types of roles or individuals we should target, and the timescales in which interventions should be developed.

We want to build long-term capacity for a more collaborative, open and equitable research and innovation system in which communities across the UK – particularly those that are marginalised and under-represented – are able to have an active role and directly benefit.

For this scheme, we define a community as a group of people who have common characteristics or interests and we are focusing on communities that are the most likely to be marginalised from research and innovation, and the wider knowledge economy. This includes, but is not limited to, working class, racialised, disabled, LGBTQ+ and geographically isolated communities.

We want to create opportunities for marginalised and under-represented communities – and the knowledge, expertise and experience they possess – to become an integral part of the research and innovation system. We therefore want to investigate different approaches that enable sustainable, equitable partnership working between communities and those within the research and innovation system.

To create a research and innovation system that values and includes communities we need to invest not only in projects and time-bound activity, but also in baseline capacity, including talented and skilled people, relationships, brokerage infrastructure, knowledge mobilisation and network building.

Investing in people

We want to build the capacity and capabilities of individuals, recognising the need to support the wide range of roles that are involved in achieving equitable, community involvement in research and innovation. We want to address the gaps which currently exist in skills, knowledge and expertise across these individual roles and provide opportunities for mutual learning together across communities, research and innovation – a model which previous UKRI initiatives have identified as valuable.

We want our investment to help to:

1. Support individuals involved, or with the potential to be involved, in the ecosystem of community involvement in research and innovation to become leaders and change-makers within their organisation or setting.
2. Increase capabilities and capacity for communities, particularly those that are marginalised and under-represented, to effectively and equitably collaborate with researchers and innovators, and influence and lead research agendas.
3. Increase capabilities and capacity for those within research and innovation to effectively and equitably collaborate with communities.

This is one part of a programme of activities UKRI is planning around building long-term capacity for supporting communities across the UK to play an active role in the research and innovation system. Other planned activities include scoping research for long-term infrastructure investment and grants for experimental community-led or community-focused research and engagement.

These wider activities will lead to insight into what resources, skills and expertise are needed to support community engagement with research and innovation, and how to best build capabilities and capacity for the organisations and people who lead these activities. This wider context will also provide insight into the value of a dedicated professional development programme for supporting the individuals involved in this work, compared to other mechanisms by which capabilities and capacities can be increased. We expect the supplier to work with those delivering these other activities to share and capitalise on the learning across the wider programme.

2. Aims and Objectives of the Project

Aims and Objectives

The aim of this project is to provide evidence-based recommendations to our team to inform the creation of a new professional development programme for people involved in community engagement with research and innovation.

The objectives are:

- to undertake scoping research to understand the context for making investments in this area and identify the types of investment that are most needed
- carry out a robust process of co-design of an approach with key internal and external stakeholders

Research questions and scope

The supplier should carry out research about, and engagement with, the individuals involved in community engagement with all UK research and innovation, not limited to that which is UKRI-funded.

The following are examples of the questions UKRI is currently interested in answering through the scoping research, consultation and co-design process. This list is not exhaustive or final, and we will work with the selected supplier to define the final research questions before the work begins.

Context and landscape

1. Existing knowledge and practice

- a. What are the current gaps in skills, knowledge and practice for individuals based in communities, in particular those that are marginalised and under-represented, to effectively and equitably collaborate with researchers and innovators?
- b. What are the current gaps in skills, knowledge and practice for individuals working in research and innovation, to effectively and equitably collaborate with communities?
- c. Where are there gaps in opportunities to develop required skills, knowledge and expertise, across communities, research and innovation?
- d. Are there existing models or approaches (in the UK or elsewhere) that we can learn from?

2. Overlapping agendas

- a. How might new investments in this area align with, or distinguish themselves from, other relevant agendas and provisions in the research, innovation and community sectors?

Potential approaches

1. Framing and approach

- a. What frameworks for developing people are most useful in this context?
- b. What frameworks around “leadership” and “change-making” are most useful in this context?
- c. How useful is a “place-based” or localised approach to developing individuals involved in community engaged research and innovation?

2. Audience and cohort-building

- a. Which individuals and types of roles, across research, innovation and communities should be included in a development programme? Should a career or experience level be specified? Are there particular UK communities we should target?
- b. How can we ensure we apply the principles of equality, diversity and inclusion when building a cohort?
- c. What are the opportunities and challenges of bringing together participants from different academic disciplines, different job roles, and different sectors? How can we ensure the needs of all participants are met?

3. Content and format of the programme

- a. What are the key themes or topics that this programme needs to cover?
- b. What are the best approaches for achieving the intended outcomes? These might include, for instance, self-led learning, peer support, active learning or project-based work.
- c. How can we be responsive to different learning styles?
- d. How could small grants for participants to lead their own project-based activities contribute to meeting the intended outcomes of the programme?
- e. How can we ensure individuals involved are able to embed the learning from this programme to lead culture change within their own setting?
- f. On what timescale is it most useful for the programme to run for all participants?

3. Suggested Methodology

Specification for the project

UKRI wishes to commission scoping and co-design of an approach which will inform the development of a professional development programme for people involved in community engagement with research. This programme would establish a cohort of leaders and change-makers to build capacity for more embedded, effective and equitable involvement of communities, particularly those that are marginalised and under-represented, in research and innovation.

We expect this project to consist of the following work packages, but we will work with the selected supplier to agree on a detailed plan before the work begins.

WP1. Scoping research and consultation – this will draw on a wide range of relevant sources (including initial scoping UKRI have carried out) as well as wider knowledge and expertise from a range of stakeholders to identify existing provision in this area, highlight where gaps exist, and make evidence-based recommendations for what is needed. This phase will include a mixture of desk research (including a literature review), interviews and focus groups with key stakeholders (e.g. community leaders, researchers and innovators, public engagement professionals, UKRI staff).

WP2. Co-design of approach – the supplier will use participatory and co-production methodologies to work with key stakeholders (e.g. community leaders, researchers and innovators, public engagement professionals, UKRI staff) to co-design an approach to a professional development programme. We expect this to happen through a series of workshops, meetings or similar.

Please note, as part of the recruitment of participants for the above activities, UKRI will make contact with people within their professional networks as appropriate, and no personal data will be shared.

4. Deliverables

1) Scoping research and consultation

- a. A minimum of 15 days desk-based analysis, including mapping of gaps and opportunities
- b. A minimum of 10 in-depth interviews with key stakeholders
- c. A minimum of 2 focus groups or similar with key stakeholders
- d. A check-in meeting and presentation for UKRI to discuss findings so far

2) Co-design of approach

- a. A minimum of 6 workshops or meetings with a small group(s) of relevant stakeholders (e.g. community leaders, researchers and innovators, public engagement professionals, UKRI staff) to co-design the programme
- b. A check-in presentation for UKRI to discuss findings so far and to inform final report
- c. A single final report suitable for publication that addresses the agreed upon research questions and includes evidence-based recommendations for funders. The report will draw on both the scoping research and co-design process. The report should be written in clear and accessible English and in a structure appropriate to the audience and purpose for which it was commissioned. The immediate audience will be UKRI's public engagement team. Please note, all reports shared by the supplier with UKRI should be anonymised and no personal data identifiable.

Schedule 3

1. The Charges for the Services shall be as set out in this Schedule 3.
