Section 4 – Specification

Smart, Secure Energy Systems (SSES)

Statement of Requirements for cyber technical resourcing – Security Architecture and Requirements.

Purpose of document

This document sets out requirements for external technical services to support development of cyber security requirements in an interoperable domestic Demand Side Response (DSR) system.

Introduction and background

The Smart Systems and Flexibility Plan 2021¹ states that the transition to a smart and flexible energy system is essential to maximise the benefits of renewable generation and ensure the UK meets Net Zero legislative targets at lowest cost. The electrification of transport and heat will increase electricity demand, and the use of smart technologies and services will be critical to integrate electric vehicles (EVs), electric heat and other smart appliances efficiently. Government has set out proposals to enable domestic and small-scale non-domestic consumers to provide flexibility to the system through Demand Side Response (DSR), with an approach underpinned by core principles of grid stability, data privacy, interoperability, and cyber security.

Cyber security outcomes are a significant cross cutting aspect of our work to deliver a Smart and Secure Electricity System ("the SSES programme").

In July 2022, the Government published a consultation focused on delivering a smart and secure electricity system, which was confirmed in the Government Response published in March 2023.²

The intention is that domestic and small-scale consumers can provide secure, interoperable flexibility through their Energy Smart appliances (ESAs), allowing access to direct financial rewards through lower energy bills, and indirectly through overall lower system costs. However, consumers will only participate if they have confidence in the devices, organisations, systems, and platforms that provide the services. Furthermore, domestic DSR organisations are likely to grow quickly and at scale and become important parts of the energy system.

Developing and implementing a detailed system and security architecture are critical factors in the successful delivery of the SSES programme. To design, implement, test, and specify security controls at a system-level requires significant time, technical expertise, and specifically cyber security knowledge, alongside a holistic understanding of the business context and its associated risks in relation to the energy sector.

² <https://www.gov.uk/government/consultations/delivering-a-smart-and-secure-electricity-system-the-interoperability-and-cyber-security-of-energy-smart-appliances-and-remote-load-control>

Context

Relevant characteristics of the smart and secure electricity system are:

- Energy Smart Appliances will be deployed at scale. Evidence from BEIS Electricity Networks Strategic Framework shows DSR peak shifting capacity could increase by up to approximately 10 times by 2050 relative to today's levels. (See page 12, Smart Systems and Flexibility Plan 2021)
- Substantially beneficial to both consumers and the environment: The products and services we will be regulating are both essential for decarbonisation, and for lowering bills for all consumers which will present wider benefits of flexibility and savings of £10bn per annum by 2050. (See page 11, Smart Systems and Flexibility Plan 2021)
- Essential to protect Critical National Infrastructure (CNI): Remotely controllable devices and load controlling actors may be CNI impacting, through the potential to compromise ESAS at scale and impact grid stability. Further into the future, DSR may eventually form part of our CNI itself, as provision of energy flexibility from ESA becomes essential to the operation of a stable energy system.
- Built to deal with complex and novel requirements We are designing new technical standards and regulatory frameworks from a relatively clean slate, with limited international and cross-sector precedent. The market is rapidly evolving, operating cross-border and cross-sector.

Contract requirements

The Department for Energy Security and Net Zero (ESNZ) are looking for a supplier to undertake the following activities in line with the published timescales. The total value of the contract will be £100,000.00 excluding VAT, contract duration is eight months.

High level objective:

To translate the recently completed cyber security risk analysis into a workable set of requirements, standards, and approaches to enable the safe and secure operation of domestic Demand Side Response at device, organisation and system level.

The buyer expects there to be close collaboration with experts creating a Trust Model and provide input to PKI design and future iteration of the reference architecture, if required.
