Background

The Low Pay Commission (LPC) invites tenders from researchers with ideas for new or other research in relation to the National Living Wage (NLW) (and the National Minimum Wage (NMW)). We are also keen to understand the impact of the recent unprecedented upheaval in the economy and the labour market caused by measures to control the global pandemic. This has affected some sectors, in particular many low-paying sectors, more than others. It has also disrupted many of the usual data sources upon which much of our standard analysis depends. The pandemic has, however, also led to the development of new data sources. We are therefore keen to consider tenders that can take advantage of these.

In addition to the impacts from the pandemic, the UK began a new trading relationship with the EU on 1 January 2021 that has seen significant changes in the way the UK trades. This may have different implications for low-paying sectors and minimum wage workers.

The LPC recognises that there may be areas of investigation worth pursuing that we have not yet identified, or which have not previously been considered in great depth. Researchers who believe that they have a worthwhile proposal that would fall into these categories are welcome to submit it for consideration. We would also encourage proposals from those who wish to extend current research on the impact of the minimum wage, whether that original research was funded by us or another organisation.

We are also interested in any information that sheds light on the treatment of young workers with regards to pay, employment and hours. We are especially interested in 21-24 years, who were covered by the adult rate of the NMW up to 2016 but were not initially entitled to the NLW. Those aged 23-24 became eligible to the NLW in April 2021 and those aged 21-22 will become eligible by 2024.

There is global interest among policy-makers in the impact of the NLW. The LPC is required to make recommendations to the Government on the path of the rate of the NLW to 2024 and on the minimum wages for young workers and apprentices each year. The findings from this research will directly inform policy decisions touching the lives of millions of workers and thousands of businesses as well as contributing to policy formation in the UK and beyond. They will also help inform deliberations about the future of the National Living Wage beyond 2024.

Aims and Objectives of the Project

The aim of these studies is to gain a better understanding of the impact of minimum wages, especially the National Living Wage, and to help fill any gaps in our knowledge. These studies could examine areas that have not been considered in any great depth in the literature; address the 'unknown unknowns'; or enable an extension of previous work, whether that original research was funded by us or another organisation.

Up to three separate projects will be commissioned in this process. The findings will feed into LPC deliberations over the next 9 months. Findings will inform the recommendations that we will make in October 2023 for the uprating of the NLW (and the other age-related minimum wage rates) in April 2024. They will also inform the discussion about the future of the NLW beyond 2024.

This research will contribute to the understanding of how firms are adjusting to the NLW and how the NLW affects workers.

The LPC has identified a few areas of research that might be particularly interesting.

These include:

- Differentials and pay progression. How has the National Living Wage affected pay differences within firms and workers' ability to progress within firms? Have changes to pay differentials affected productivity or training within firms? This would ideally use firm-level data and may need a longer time frame;
- Exploring the impact of the recent change in aligning the Apprentice Rate to the 16-17 Year Old Rate;
- The nature, extent and experiences of one-sided flexibility among workers. One-sided flexibility is where workers experience regular and significant changes to their working hours, but with little control over this. It is found in some (but not all) zero hours, short hours and agency working settings as well as elsewhere.
- Exploring the earnings outcomes for different types of apprenticeships several years after completion, particularly those that make use of the apprentice minimum wage during the apprenticeship. This study should utilise LEO data (longitudinal education outcomes).
- What is the relationship between the NLW and the 'gig economy'? This might consider questions such as 1) How are gig workers newly eligible for the NMW being treated by their employers 2) Is the NLW causing employers to shift to platform/gig working 3) Do NMW workers combine standard NMW jobs with gig work? If so why? How well does that work for them?;
- Further research of the impact of the NMW/NLW by protected characteristics to cover the most recent uprating's;
- Exploration of spatial differences in the impact of the NMW/NLW. How and why has the NMW/NLW had different effects across different geographies in the UK? Whether there are links between the NMW/NLW and internal migration (investigating whether the introduction and subsequent increases in the NLW have changed internal migration patterns);
- In light of the recent period of high inflation, an investigation into whether the impact of the NMW/NLW differs in periods of high inflation. Last year, employer survey respondents were far more likely to say they'd increased prices in response to the NLW. This may be because they had no other choice, or because an inflationary environment made it easier to pass costs on, when previously firms had worried about their competitiveness if they pushed prices up. This project could also assess whether energy prices have greater or less impact in low-paying sectors;
- How has the minimum wage affected transitions for low-paid workers into other low-paid jobs, higher-paid jobs, self-employment, unemployment and inactivity;
- Research on the German minimum wage found evidence of reallocation (Dustmann, Lindner, Schönberg, Umkehrer, and vom Berge, 2021). How has the NMW/NLW affected the allocation of workers between firms? Has the minimum wage caused workers to move into more productive firms?;
- Recent research in the US (Clemens and Strain, 2021) has differentiated between the impacts of large and small increases in the minimum wage. This could be replicated in the UK comparing the large increases in 2001; 2003 and 2004; 2016; 2020, 2022 and 2023 with smaller increases;
- As we look towards post-2024, it is appropriate to reconsider the newly established relativities between the various minimum wage rates and what will be the large step at age 21. This research could give an overview of the different treatment of young workers across the globe and then potentially look at the role of the minimum wage framework in the development of youth career paths in these countries; and

- An investigation of any evidence that the changes in the NLW have led to substitution of young (those aged under 23) and older workers (those aged 23 and over).

We welcome tenders that address any of these areas of research or indeed any other gaps in our knowledge.

As we noted above, we are looking to commission up to three research projects that will complement each other.

The LPC invites tenders for research that will provide informed insights by 7 September 2023, and final results by the end of September 2023. These findings will mainly inform LPC deliberations in October 2023 for the uprating of the NLW and the other minimum wage rates in April 2024; but will also contribute to the knowledge base that will provide the evidence for Commissioners in deliberations about the future of the NLW beyond 2024.

Suggested Methodology

The methods and data used will be entirely dependent on the project and these should be specified in detail by the prospective researchers. The research should use up to date, respected, methods, in line with recent studies. It is essential that the methodology and analysis stands up to external scrutiny by professional academics, economists, statisticians and analysts.

Potential contractors should specify the techniques that they intend to employ. Tenders should also state which data are to be used and give some indication of their strengths and limitations and in particular whether the available data will restrict the analysis in any way.

Deliverables

The initial primary audience for this work will be the LPC. The main output of the study will be a report, detailing the aims and objectives of the research, the methodology adopted and the main findings. The report should include a brief non-technical Executive Summary. An electronic copy (preferably Word and pdf format) for the LPC website will be required. In addition, we will require the data for any charts in that report (for replication in our report or future publications) and the syntax files used in the research. The LPC will make the findings publicly available, and a synopsis of the report will be included in the Low Pay Commission's 2023 Report.

In addition, there would be other deliverables expected. Deliverables may vary according to individual projects but will include:

- An informal presentation of the project at an initial meeting;
- A methodology paper;
- Regular updates on emerging findings and project progress;
- An interim report;
- A draft final report;

- A final report incorporating comments from LPC
- A presentation of the key aspects of the work (at the research symposium on 7 September 2023); and
- Key datasets and syntax files if appropriate.

The timescale for delivery of the research is flexible according to the needs of the project, but the sooner results can be provided the better. Aside from the workshop/presentation dates, all dates shown below should be interpreted as “at the latest”. We do not wish to rush research and end up with a poorer quality product, so if research outputs can be provided before these dates without harming their quality this would be greatly appreciated. Therefore, tenderers should set out the minimum time they need to deliver a high-quality research product.

The key dates are: a presentation on data sources and methodology at an introductory meeting in May; draft questionnaires or interview guides as appropriate by 2 June (at the latest); a follow-up meeting in w/c 12 June 2023; a draft interim report with initial findings by 25 August 2023 (at the latest); final findings to be presented at the 11th Annual LPC Research Symposium on 7 September 2023; a draft final report by 29 September 2023 (at the latest); and an agreed final report by 31 October 2023 (at the latest). Publication will be in November/December 2023. Project management is likely to include attendance at an inception meeting at LPC, and review meetings as required.
