- B9-6 Nothing in the Contract restricts either the Contracting Authority, UK SBS or the Supplier's liability for:
- B9-6-1 death or personal injury resulting from its negligence; or
- B9-6-2 its fraud (including fraudulent misrepresentation); or
- B9-6-3 Breach of any obligations as to title implied by Section 12 of the Sale of Goods Act 1979 or Section 2 of the Supply of Goods and Services Act 1982.
- B9-6-4 Nothing in this contract restricts Supplier liability in regard to breaches of Intellectual Property or GDPR.

Background

As outlined in the UK government's Net Zero Strategy (Oct 2021), emissions from UK industry¹ may need to drop by 87-96% from 2019 levels², with 43-53% of that needed by 2030. To achieve this, government must deliver a number of key policy initiatives, including fast-paced development of new industrial energy efficiency (EE) policies, with the goal of delivering Net Zero-critical savings in the 2020s. The Committee on Climate Change (CCC) reports that there remains at least 3MtCO₂e potential savings from industrial EE by 2035³. Known barriers to delivering these savings in industry include: lack of knowledge and expertise on EE; low prioritisation or capacity to implement energy saving measures; and access to finance for more complex retrofits and industrial machinery.

To address this, the Net Zero Strategy sets out a number of measures to deliver on this EE potential in manufacturing and industry, including:

- New regulatory options to drive earlier uptake of energy efficiency measures;
- Adapting scope and strengthening the requirements of existing schemes, such as (but not limited to):
 - Energy Savings Opportunity Scheme (ESOS);
 - Climate Change Agreements (CCAs);
 - Industrial Energy Transformation Fund (IETF).
- Encouraging widespread adoption and implementation in industry of energy management; systems such as ISO 50001, supported through a digital tool.

Developing these new policy areas and updating/improving these existing schemes provides the context for this piece of work. To support the development of new policy and/or improvements that could be made to existing schemes for manufacturing and industry, the Department for Business, Energy and Industrial Strategy (BEIS) is looking to build on the current evidence base by gathering further detail on other OECD countries' energy efficiency policies (including any policies that have recently ended) with similar objectives – with a view to applying any lessons learned to future policy decisions.

In particular, BEIS would like this research to focus on policies in OECD countries that aim to increase the number of manufacturing firms that:

- a) Monitor their energy usage and/or energy efficiency (e.g. through sub-meters);
- b) Submit data on their energy usage and/or energy efficiency – providing the government with a robust evidence base;
- c) Conduct regular, high-quality audits of their energy usage and/or energy efficiency;
- d) Install energy management systems, such as ISO50001; and
- e) Meet a minimum standard of energy efficiency (either a minimum standard encompassing a whole industrial site, or a minimum standard for a specific industrial process)

¹ Defined for the purposes of this ITT as organisations under SIC codes 5, 7-9 and 10-33.

² Net Zero Strategy, p.122

- f) Use a benchmarking system to assess their energy usage or energy efficiency

Examples of policies known to BEIS which may be of interest include:

- German ISO50001 policy – whereby manufacturing companies can make use of tax relief schemes if they have ISO50001 certification.
- Japan SME audit scheme – whereby Japan offers free audits to firms with less than 300 employees.
- Japan benchmarking system – whereby Japan sets targets for industrial firms and offers subsidies for meeting these targets.
- Italy audit scheme – developed as a result of the EU Directive on Energy Efficiency in 2014
- US Industrial Assessment Centres (IACs) initiative – whereby engineering students deliver free energy audits to SMEs.

There are already numerous broader studies of other countries' approaches to maximising energy efficiency in their respective manufacturing sectors, such as:

- “Energy Efficiency 2021 (IEA, 2021)”⁴ – an annual report on energy efficiency that includes developments in policy, technology and analysis on energy data.
- “Energy audits and reporting research, including the Energy Savings Opportunity Scheme” (BEIS, 2020)⁵ explored international energy efficiency auditing policies with a focus on EU member states. It also had a smaller section on non-EU specific policies. The research gave a broad overview of auditing policies in selected countries, looking at factors such eligibility criteria and whether other countries mandated the uptake of recommendations.
- “Best Practices and Case Studies for Industrial Energy Efficiency Improvement” (United Nations Environment Programme, 2016)⁶ assessed the role of industrial energy efficiency improvements in wider energy efficiency goals globally.

However, these papers do not provide sufficient insight into the design, delivery challenges and impact of policies on energy monitoring, auditing and management policies – particularly for the manufacturing sector. Therefore, the main aim of this new research is to better understand the detail of specific policies focused on improving how manufacturing firms monitor, audit and manage their energy usage – with a view to introducing or updating similar policies in the UK.

We would like this research to consist of two phases: a Rapid Evidence Assessment of countries' policies (including relevant policies that have recently ended) within the target scope; followed by a small number of in-depth case studies of specific policies that may be of particular interest and relevance to the UK. The two phases are explained in more detail in the Aims and Objectives and Methodology section.

This project will predominantly be desk-based research, based at the successful tenderer's own premises. There may be a need to contact or meet with individuals overseas who have familiarity with specific policies; it is envisaged that such contact, where necessary, could take place digitally. Meetings with BEIS to discuss progress and outputs are expected to be held digitally.

Detailed case studies produced through Phases 1 and 2 of this research will be valuable in future policy development. An understanding of the scope, objectives, compliance rates, data management, and broader policy frameworks these case studies work within will be essential to ensuring that BEIS can transfer international learnings into their ongoing policy development. Outputs will contribute to policy development targeted at improving energy efficiency within UK manufacturing and industry.

Aims and Objectives of the Project

The main aim of this research is to better understand other OECD countries' policies (including any that have recently ended) that aim to improve the energy efficiency of manufacturing and industry, with a view to introducing or updating similar policies in the UK. Of particular interest are policies and/or regulation that:

- Increase the uptake and value of energy audits (or a similar type of assessment of the energy usage and energy efficiency of an industrial site or industrial process)
- Provide Government with data on the manufacturing sector's energy usage and energy efficiency – for example, regulation requiring regular reporting of firms' energy usage or energy efficiency.
- Set "benchmarks" for the energy efficiency of industrial processes – for example, if firms are given ratings for their industrial processes' energy efficiency, or if minimum standards are set.
- Increase the uptake of Energy Management Systems, such as ISO50001.

We'd like this research to consist of two phases: a Rapid Evidence Assessment of countries' policies, followed by case studies of specific policies that may be of particular interest and relevance to the UK. The two phases are explained in more detail below:

Phase 1 (30% of project): Better understand other OECD countries' policies (including any that have recently ended) that aim to improve firms' monitoring, auditing, and management of energy usage in manufacturing and industry.

Phase 1 will be a Rapid Evidence Assessment to better understand whether and how other OECD countries incentivise (or enforce) firms in manufacturing and industry to:

- a. Monitor their energy usage and/or energy efficiency (e.g. through sub-meters)
- b. Submit data on their energy usage and/or energy efficiency – providing the government with a robust evidence base
- c. Conduct regular audits of their energy usage and/or energy efficiency
- d. Install energy management systems such as ISO50001.
- e. Meet "benchmarks" or minimum standards of energy efficiency – for example, if firms are given ratings for their industrial processes' energy efficiency.

The key output from Phase 1 will be a summary report of countries' industrial EE policies relating to encouraging manufacturing firms monitoring, auditing and managing their energy usage and energy efficiency. This summary should assess these policies against a list of key metrics, such as number of firms in scope; cost; and applicability and relevance for the UK Industrial Energy Efficiency policy landscape.

The report should provide sufficient information to establish a shortlist of 5-10 policies to be explored in more detail as Phase 2 case studies. This shortlist would consist of policies that appear to be particularly effective in driving energy efficiency and that are most relevant to the UK manufacturing sector.

Phase 2 (70% of project): Provide detailed case studies of a small selection of policies that best demonstrate global best practice – including an assessment of deliverability and impact.

The second phase will then provide in-depth case studies of each policy on the shortlist.

Phase 2 will be involve producing detailed case studies of around 5-10 policies that could provide insights into different approaches the UK could adopt. Each case study will explore at a minimum:

- The nature of the evidence used to justify the introduction of the policy or regulation (for example, economic theory or an academic study; a survey of relevant businesses; interviews with experts; etc.).
- Wider energy efficiency policy landscape and where this specific policy fits into the overall picture
- Policy design – including eligibility, scope, compliance, etc.
- Key delivery challenges of implementing policy (and how these have been overcome)
- Annual cost of the policy (if relevant)
- Details of data that is collected, how it is stored and handled, including what is, and is not, made publicly available.
- Impact (in terms of additionality) of the policy or regulation on energy usage, energy efficiency and/or carbon emissions
- Estimated impact and/or burden on businesses
- Learnings for the UK

The key output from Phase 2 will be a detailed final report for publication that will present case studies on selected policies and summarise key findings. This will include an assessment of the quality of research and evidence on each policy.

Overall, the output of this work will support the development of new policies and/or improvements to existing schemes for manufacturing and industry, such as:

- Energy Savings Opportunity Scheme (ESOS) – 4-yearly energy audits from all large companies promoting uptake of EE measures (not limited to industrial processes; and
- Streamlined Energy and Carbon Reporting (SECR) – requires large companies that meet eligibility criteria to report energy usage (not limited to industrial processes) in annual company reports.

Suggested Methodology

The expected methodology for the two Phases are laid out below.

Phase 1:

- Rapid Evidence Assessment (REA) of all OECD countries that have or have had policies or regulation that aim to improve the monitoring, auditing and/or management of energy usage and efficiency in the manufacturing sector. This exact scope will be confirmed with the successful tenderer upon commencement of the contract.
- This will likely involve using online tools (such as the IEA's policy database) and government websites to better understand the detail and specifics of different policies.
- A key output should be a summary of the countries that have relevant policies and assesses these policies against a list of key metrics, which will be agreed with the contractor, but could include: type of policy; number of firms in scope; cost; and/or applicability and relevance for the UK.
- Phase 1 should provide sufficient information to establish a shortlist of policies where we'd like to produce more detailed case studies.

Phase 2:

- Phase 2 will be involve producing detailed case studies of around 5-10 policies that could provide insights into different approaches the UK could adopt. Each case study will explore at a minimum:
- The scale and type of evidence used to justify the introduction of the policy or regulation (for example, economic theory or an academic study; a survey of relevant businesses; interviews with experts; etc.).
- Wider energy efficiency policy landscape and where this specific policy fits into the overall picture
- Policy design – including eligibility, scope, compliance, etc.
- Key delivery challenges of implementing policy (and how these have been overcome)
- Annual cost of the policy (if relevant)
- Details of data that is collected, how it is stored and handled, including what is, and is not, made publicly available.
- Impact (in terms of additionality) of the policy or regulation on energy usage, energy efficiency and/or carbon emissions
- Estimated impact and/or burden on businesses
- Learnings for the UK
- Overarching assessment of quality of literature and evidence on the policy

Phase 2 will involve translating a variety of academic and government publications (such as scheme evaluations) to better understand the impact of the policy. Additionally, discussions with parties who are closely linked to the policy to get a balanced and objective view on the relative merits and drawbacks of the policy will also be crucial – whether they be in academia, consultancy, or the government or embassy in the country of interest. BEIS can facilitate making contact with government counterparts and embassy staff if required, but contractors should make clear what networks and contacts they are able to use.

Deliverables

We expect the research to take place over a period of 3-5 months with around 30% of the contractor's time being spent on phase 1 and the remaining 70% of the research time to be spent on phase 2.

Within around two months of the project start date, we would expect a short Phase 1 report and accompanying presentation summarising the Rapid Evidence Assessment and relevant policies, and providing options for shortlisting policies that could be explored in Phase 2. We expect that key Phase 1 findings would be summarised in the final report.

The key Phase 2 deliverable is a report and accompanying presentation summarising 5-10 case studies of policies (existing, or that have recently ended) in other countries that effectively improve the monitoring, auditing and/or management of energy usage and efficiency in the manufacturing sector. These case studies should be a result of extensive research (using both published evidence and speaking to policy experts and academics), and should cover at a minimum:

- The scale and type of evidence used to justify the introduction of the policy or regulation (for example, economic theory or an academic study; a survey of relevant businesses; interviews with experts; etc.).
- Wider energy efficiency policy landscape and where this specific policy fits into the overall picture
- Policy design – including eligibility, scope, compliance, etc.
- Key delivery challenges of implementing policy (and how these have been overcome)
- Annual cost of the policy (if relevant)
- Details of data that is collected, how it is stored and handled, including what is and is not made publicly available.
- Impact (in terms of additionality) of the policy or regulation on energy usage, energy efficiency and/or carbon emissions
- Estimated impact and/or burden on businesses
- Learnings for the UK
- Overarching assessment of quality of literature and evidence on the policy

We would expect to publish Phase 1 and Phase 2 key findings in a single quality-assured final report.

Throughout the project, we expect to have regular updates on emerging findings and project progress.

Therefore within 3 weeks we would anticipate the outputs stated previously for phase one.

Then after another 5 weeks expect the outputs stated previously for phase 2.
