THE IMPACT OF COVID-19 ON CONSUMERS VULNERABLE TO HOUSEHOLD FOOD INSECURITY – QUALITATIVE RESEARCH

Background

As part of CV19 horizon scanning, FSA has been conducting work to understand the issues faced by consumers in economic hardship when it comes to food and CV19. Our research (see annex) indicates that a significant proportion of consumers are facing household food insecurity for economic reasons, either because they were already food insecure or because of the sudden economic shock of reduced wages and unemployment due to CV19. We have overlaid various datasets to estimate for whom and where and where this might be most extreme. It is likely that being in this situation leads to particular food risks.

We would like to support our quantitative, desk and data research with qualitative work to help us better understand the issues faced, risks taken and the lived experience of people in this situation.

Objectives

To examine the feelings, attitudes, drivers and behaviours of consumers experiencing household food insecurity. Research questions could include:

- The issues faced by this group when it comes to food.
- Understanding the food risks they might take and the reasons why they might take them, including their own home food practices as well as how they are sourcing food.
- What they think it might mean if the situation continues in the longer term (i.e. for the next year, or two)

Timing

Work to be conducted during May 2020.

Scope

To include a range of consumers from within this risk group. This is a diverse group and may include e.g. young people, parents on low incomes, people who have been furloughed, people from Black and minority ethnic backgrounds, people who have been recently laid off as well as those who were already food insecure.

Methodology

There are distinct ethical and methodological challenges to conducting work on a sensitive topic where time and ability to talk face to face is limited. We are open to any effective and appropriate methodological proposal. Given the emergent nature of the situation, it might be most effective to propose an iterative process where first findings can come quickly allowing us to review and explore deeper.

Proposals should include how this will meet the objectives, a recruitment and analysis plan and a statement on ethics, risks, sustainability and data management.

Outputs

- Dissemination of findings will be important; reporting should include innovative ways of allowing the voice of these consumers to be heard, including through storytelling, video, etc.
- Eventually, a 1-3-25 style report with supporting methodological annexes and / or comprehensive slide deck for publication.

Vulnerable groups - impact of C19 on household food insecurity

Background

Traditionally, we consider vulnerability in terms of propensity to get a foodborne illness either because you are immunocompromised or your practices put you at risk. It is likely however that the current focus on hygiene around C-19 will secondarily (temporarily) reduce the risk of foodborne disease.

Our focus for this analysis<sup>1</sup> therefore has been on access to safe, healthy food in the short and medium term including the potential knock-on risks re: food safety, food authenticity or food crime. There are three main groups that we have considered vulnerable to household food insecurity as a result of C-19. One vulnerable group are the 1.5m 'shielded' highly vulnerable (immunocompromised) people. We have not focused on this group in terms of household food insecurity as they are in the main already being provided for with food parcels, preferential online delivery slots and can be individually identified – however, they remain at elevated risk for foodborne disease. The FSA has been working with colleagues to help identify those within this group with allergies or hypersensitivity so that they are not inadvertently put at increased risk.

People who are self-isolating

A second group comprises those who are also self-isolating (over 70s, or those who have been exposed to CV19 or shown symptoms). For those who are self-isolating but who are not at risk of hardship, the most important issue may be access to delivery services. Although there are not figures on the numbers of people who need to self-isolate, there are reports that there are 17.6 million people in Britain who are at elevated risk of the virus (elderly, pregnant or with pre-existing health conditions). 860,000 of these people were struggling to afford food before the crisis. This has been a topic of much conversation on social media.

Last week, 32% of UK adults were unable to get a delivery of food or obtain it in other ways and 55% were unable to find the food they needed or wanted in the shops. Many restaurants have converted to delivery/box models. Supermarket online deliveries are being prioritised but services are profoundly oversubscribed, some local businesses are filling some of the gap but we believe it to remain significant. Local businesses sell food at a higher price. Local authorities and local volunteer groups have been setting up community food hubs taking orders online or by phone, for home delivery. Many businesses have changed their business models very quickly, converting to box schemes, lending their shop space, storing capacity, cooking facilities, diverting products to where most needed.

People in economic hardship

A third, potentially overlapping group of people may be more vulnerable to household food insecurity, either because they are already in poverty or have been subject to a sudden economic shock (loss of income). For this group, the issue will be the ongoing inability to afford enough food to eat. Reports indicate that approximately 20% of adults (~10 million) in England, Wales, and Northern Ireland face at least marginal food insecurity annually. The number of food insecure adults in Britain is estimated to have quadrupled under lockdown, with 1.5 million Britons reporting not eating for a whole day in the last month because they had no money or access to food. 8 million adults report experiencing some food insecurity and 14 million report having lost income as a result of Covid-19, with one million reporting the loss of their entire income because of the pandemic; over a third of these believing they would not be entitled to any government help.

Families who have children who are eligible for free school meals are under significant distress, with reports of delays to the distribution of food vouchers to those families. As of 9th April, 33% were yet to receive a substitute for free school meals – equating to 500,000 children. Food banks are reporting up to a 300% increase in use compared to this time last year and struggling to source enough appropriate food, to distribute it effectively due to the loss of their (often older) volunteer base and buildings being closed by landlords. Panic buying, supermarket queueing and online orders place new burdens on people who are socially disadvantaged or time poor (as many essential workers with children are). The groups at more risk of food insecurity are those with life-limiting health conditions and disabilities, who are unemployed, and people from Black and minority ethnic groups.

In the first week of April, 31% of adults were worried about there not being enough food available in shops for them or their household in the next month. 28% of adults were worried they or their household will not be able to afford food in the next month. Some had skipped meals or limited their meals because they did not have enough money to buy food (18%), were not well enough to shop or cook (17%) or had no means to get to the shops (19%). In the last month, 58% of adults or their family members have eaten food that has gone past its use-by date by at least one week or more (63% of 16-24 year olds). 22% of 16-24 year olds said they had sought food from a food charity or food bank.

Access to delivery services is not shared with the most economically disadvantaged – in many cases, it requires up-front payments, minimum orders and online access and digital skills. This risk is exacerbated if you live in an area known to be a ‘food desert’ - an area in which it is difficult to buy affordable or good-quality fresh food. There is a higher risk of food insecurity in towns and fringe areas as opposed to rural areas. Using available data for England, we have mapped the areas most vulnerable to economic hardship<sup>2</sup> and overlaid this with data on food deserts<sup>3</sup>. This has identified some potential areas of concern (see Fig1<sup>4</sup>) and we have a list of the local authorities relevant to those locations.

Fig 1 - maps of the areas most vulnerable to economic hardship overlaid with data on food deserts

Existing or emergent economic vulnerability co-located with a specifically deprived food desert

- Emergent: The 20% of LSOAs in England with the highest proportion of 16-64-year olds who are either self-employed or who work in elementary occupations
- Pre-existing: The 20% most deprived LSOAs in England that are at the centre of a deprived food desert
- Both emergent and pre-existing

Reasonable near future (3-6 month) scenario

For those who are currently suffering food poverty due to ongoing or sudden hardship related to C19, it is likely that this hardship will continue. The sectors which are the most likely to have been laying off staff (accommodation and food services, administrative and support services, and the arts, entertainment and recreation) are the ones with the lowest wages. Average earnings in 2020 are projected to be 7.3% lower compared to 2019 levels and unemployment is projected to increase from 3.8% in 2019 to 7.3% in 2020 - and will take longer to recover.

The initial demand shock from increased shopping will probably resolve itself, but longer term we might see issues with supply both domestically and from imports, due to shortages of workforce. Online deliveries will continue to be under pressure as demand exceeds supply.

As 47% of all food and drink consumed in the UK is imported, disruptions of the supply chain are likely to have a substantial impact on food availability and prices in the UK, particularly of fresh fruit and vegetables, rice, tea, pasta and tinned vegetables. What will be available in the supermarkets over the next few months will be different and it is reasonable to assume that prices may rise. As prices for these products and other non-food essentials (handwash, toilet rolls, medicaments) rise, consumers in the lowest income brackets will be able to afford less.

Worst case scenario

OBR projections assume that lockdown will be lifted within c.3 months with less stringent restrictions in place for another 3 months. However, should restrictions continue the impact is likely to lead to a longer-term increase in unemployment and economic recession. This will impact disproportionately on households that are already food insecure.

So what?

1. Access to food supplies will continue to impact people's health and wellbeing. This is particular issue with more vulnerable groups:
  - People advised to self-isolate will not be able/willing to do so if they cannot access food.
  - Volunteers may not be trained in food safety and might put themselves and others at risk.
  - Food banks short on supplies might be tempted to extend food past its use-by date
  - Discontent around food insecurity might affect broader compliance with social distancing or, in an extreme, result in unrest.
2. Consumer health may be more at risk in the short and longer term
  - Reduced income is likely to make people more price sensitive – this combined with shortages and price volatility of staple and fresh products may further restrict access to a safe, healthy diet.
  - People take risks with food past its use-by date – this may become more pronounced if they are fearing or experiencing food insecurity due to access or economic hardship
3. Supply chain pressures may lead to increased risk to food safety from either deliberate interventions (e.g. increased incentives for food crime) or non-deliberate (changes in food business controls)
  - Food businesses might seek unapproved suppliers to fill gaps on shelves
  - Food businesses might substitute products without allergen information
  - Food businesses might extend use-by dates illicitly

- Price increases might incentivise food crime owing to greater returns
- Price increases might increase concealed substitution of cheaper products

Annex 3 – Suppliers Proposal

Understanding your needs.

The headline: we need a qualitative understanding of the emergent issues faced, risks taken and lived experience of people facing food insecurity under Covid-19.

The FSA have extensive understanding of citizen contexts, behaviours and attitudes around food - including the needs of those who are less well off and/or more vulnerable.

Under the disruption of Covid-19, the FSA's rapid horizon scanning research has highlighted that a significant proportion are facing household food insecurity for economic reasons.

There is reason to suspect that this may also link to increases in behaviours which pose serious health risks - for example, use of food past its sell by dates.

Food insecurity is also a risk factor in its own right - contributing to wider health and mental health risks that could exacerbate existing issues or contribute to poor outcomes for the public under Covid-19.

The FSA is exploring this issue via multiple approaches - including quantitative, desk and expert data. Now, qualitative work is needed to explore citizen feelings, attitudes, and behaviours.

Understanding lived experience is critical: we need to know how issues are playing out in real life to support rapid response to meet public need.

Key challenges & mitigations - 1.

Ethics and safeguarding

This project raises real risks, both for our participants and our research team, that need careful management.

Under pandemic conditions where participants may be experiencing worsening financial, health and/or mental health issues, it's critical we support our participants - and our team - effectively during the research.

- We offer a senior team with experience interviewing vulnerable audiences - including about sensitive issues like finance, insecurity, and health and mental health issues.
- We'll develop a participant safeguarding plan: at minimum we need to provide effective signposting, and potentially have a professional mental health expert on hand.
- We plan for psychological safety throughout for our team.

Validity and quality

The outputs of this work will potentially be circulated widely, and will inform the FSA's strategic response during a critical time. Quality is paramount.

This is a relatively small-scale qualitative exercise with potentially big impact. It's critical that our design, conduct and reporting can all withstand external scrutiny; in particular, we'll need careful and robust sample selection.

- Our sampling approach will be led by the FSA and others' scale data on vulnerabilities, allowing us to gather stories that illuminate experiences of documented issues
- If possible, we'd propose to work closely with the FSA's internal research and insight teams to inform sample design (we're open to this element being led directly by you)

Objectives of this work.

Understand the experiences, feelings, attitudes, drivers and behaviours of citizens who are experiencing household food insecurity.

Key challenges & mitigations -2.

Sampling and access

Critical to the success of this work is speaking to a diverse range of people, including those that Government find hard to reach - now with the added challenge of lockdown and social distancing.

→ We have a range of ideas on how to find people by making use of existing community level touchpoints and newer online ones - e.g UK MutualAid network, community WhatsApp or Facebook groups. We also have extensive contacts with smaller charities around the UK who can help source participants.

→ We'll adapt our interviewing approach to work around distancing, whilst still getting rich insight. As well as online or phone interviewing we'll include other remote data gathering approaches e.g WhatsApp messaging, video diaries, day-in-the-life photos from participants.

Storytelling and cut-through

We believe that capturing individuals' stories can help bring this work to life - but we need to get the right tone balance and frame the work carefully.

→ We'll work with you to get the framing right: it's important readers understand these as lived examples of more widely documented issues, not 'making the case' that these issues exist in their own right.

→ We'll combine a range of visual communication approaches (e.g potentially including infographics, before/after journey maps, audio or short video clips, photography, or case studies) that provide impact.

→ We'll carefully manage the tone with you. We represent citizens honestly and transparently - but will do so in a way that cannot leave us accused of scaremongering.

16.3 The Buyer may talk to the Supplier to help it decide whether to publish information under clause 16. However, the extent, content and format of the disclosure is the Buyer's decision, which does not need to be reasonable.

17. Invalid parts of the contract

If any part of the Contract is prohibited by Law or judged by a court to be unlawful, void or unenforceable, it must be read as if it was removed from that Contract as much as required and rendered ineffective as far as possible without affecting the rest of the Contract, whether it's valid or enforceable.

18. No other terms apply

The provisions incorporated into the Contract are the entire agreement between the Parties. The Contract replaces all previous statements and agreements whether written or oral. No other provisions apply.

19. Other people's rights in a contract

No third parties may use the Contracts (Rights of Third Parties) Act (CRTPA) to enforce any term of the Contract unless stated (referring to CRTPA) in the Contract. This does not affect third party rights and remedies that exist independently from CRTPA.

20. Circumstances beyond your control
