Statement of Requirements

Background

The Institute of Naval Medicine Environmental and Industrial Hazards (EIH) Laboratories is a testing and calibration facility that has ISO 17025 accreditation, awarded to us by the United Kingdom Accreditation Service (UKAS). The Microbiology Laboratory performs testing of potable water, bottled/mineral water, bathing water and pool water for the Royal Navy, Royal Fleet Auxiliary, Army, Royal Air Force and other UK and overseas land establishments. Other analysis performed by the Microbiology Laboratory include swab sampling and investigations in partnership with the Infectious Disease Unit, The Royal Free Hospital and EMU, who are based at INM.

The laboratory is required to analyse water samples received from the above customers. For the laboratory to provide this service the requirement to make our own media is both essential and needs to be cost effective. To be able to do this requires Autoclaves and Incubators.

Each piece of equipment requires calibration to UKAS standards as well as an annual service.

Requirement

Each Autoclave will require an annual UKAS accredited calibration at 2 temperature ranges that cover the sterilisation temperature ranges of the media that is being made and 1 temperature range for the waste sterilisation that is produced.
