SCHEDULE 3 – SPECIFICATION OF REQUIREMENTS

1. Introduction

1.1. Cefas (The Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science) is an executive agency of Defra. It is an applied science agency that primarily supports government decision making whilst extending its reach across public sector, the EU and wider markets where possible in regards to marine and closely related environments.

Our work takes us from freshwater to the open ocean, and includes both wild and farmed fish. Our influence and leadership spans a wide spectrum of issues, including:

- climate change impacts and adaptation
- marine planning and environmental licensing
- sustainable fisheries management
- marine biodiversity and habitats
- fish and shellfish health and hygiene
- emergency response.

For further background information on Cefas, please visit our website at <http://www.cefas.co.uk>

2. Background to Requirement

2.1 Ocean Country Partnership Programme Marine Pollution Strand

The Ocean Country Partnership Programme (OCP) Marine Pollution strand will build on work in countries where Cefas and UK marine partnerships are already active, as well as forge new relationships in priority regions. OCP Marine Pollution will begin by building on the successes of the Commonwealth Litter Programme (CLiP), using established foundations to expand technical training and capacity building in Overseas Development Assistance (ODA) eligible countries and foster collaboration internationally.

The main objectives of OCP 's Marine Pollution strand are to:

- prevent and reduce marine pollution and other forms of pollution and their impact on the marine environment, public health and safety
- reduce the knock-on impact of marine pollution on economies and communities, including vital industries, such as tourism and fisheries
- reduce pollution in the marine environment where practical
- enhance knowledge and understanding of marine pollution, both in terms of distribution as well as impacts
- support partner countries in the development, implementation and coordination of programmes for marine pollution reduction
- develop management approaches to marine pollution that are consistent with international best practice

Under the OCP, Cefas will use existing experience of collaboration at an international level, to develop innovative science techniques and analyses with OCP partner countries that address marine pollution challenges.

2.2 Approach

Marine litter is a current priority for the Marine Pollution strand. There is no single solution that will effectively resolve the issue of marine litter. The OCPP will work with partner countries to identify tailored support to tackle the challenges, recognising the need for holistic cross-sectoral action, involving both upstream and downstream interventions. Through building capacity and expertise, partner countries will be well equipped to develop robust and effective policy that addresses core marine environmental issues and empowers the local communities and economies that depend on the ocean. The collection and analysis of evidence on the extent of marine litter problems and their environmental and social implications will enable decision makers to develop effective management solutions.

3. Scope of Requirements

Marine litter is a problem on Sri Lanka's coasts. OCPP seeks to collect evidence on the extent and nature of the problem, its connection to other forms of marine pollution and the potential impacts on sensitive coastal habitats.

Poor waste management on land is a major contributor to marine litter, particularly from plastic materials, which can have a negative impact in marine and coastal environments. Marine litter often ends up washing ashore and accumulates on beaches or is trapped in coastal vegetation, where larger items are snared within the vegetation and smaller items are accumulated in sediments in the form of microplastics. Given the scale of the marine litter problem worldwide, determining the characteristics, origin, root causes and contributing factors of marine litter in sensitive coastal habitats is necessary to better understand the risks and determine appropriate management responses.

Seagrass is an important feature of Sri Lanka's coasts. Seagrass habitats are biodiverse areas that provide ecological services such as nursery and feeding grounds to numerous marine species, including commercially exploited fish and invertebrates. They also stabilise loose coastal sediments and filter pollutants and suspended particles, helping maintain water quality. In addition, they are a major carbon "sink" because they absorb and store carbon dioxide, thus contributing to climate change mitigation. Unfortunately, the number and extent of seagrass habitats are rapidly decreasing at a global scale because of human disturbances such as increased coastal pollution, warming sea temperatures, rising sea levels and severe weather events. The degradation of these habitats can result in carbon emissions and the loss of biodiversity, impacting the capacity of seagrasses to provide their natural services. Twelve species of seagrass have been recorded in Sri Lanka, but the habitats face pressure from loss of extent and species decline. While the filtering of debris within seagrass beds may prevent litter accumulating on beaches, it is unclear what the effect might be on the ecology of the seagrass and the animals that depend on it, adding a further potential pressure on these already at-risk habitats.

The overall aim of this project is to develop a programme to assess the presence of marine litter in the coastal seagrass habitats of Sri Lanka, characterise the condition of the habitats and the potential impacts of the litter within the broader context of environmental stressors on Sri Lanka's coastal regions. The main output of this contract will be the design of a study to describe seagrass extent, biodiversity and pollution status with respect to marine litter and water quality. The work will also include the collection of some scoping data to prove the do-ability of the techniques and to assess the need for more/alternative equipment or processes. The scoping exercises will require field surveys at locations around the Sri Lanka coast. The main outcome will be the proposal of a project to increase the understanding of the status of the coastal habitats and a greater ability for Sri Lankan coastal managers to take informed decisions on management practices in these locations.

To this effect, Cefas requires the supplier to design, in collaboration with Cefas, a programme of work to survey selected seagrass meadow sites in Sri Lanka to characterise the seagrass habitats and assess the presence of marine litter and potentially other pollutants. The supplier will also undertake field work to select sites, test protocols and evaluate the feasibility of the techniques suggested for the survey.

The supplier is required to indicate their preferred protocols and/or any relevant previous work carried out for:

1. Seagrass spatial characterisation. In-situ surveys to determine the extent (where possible) and condition of seagrass meadows in a number of sites around Sri Lanka, following recognised standard approaches such as the method described by SeagrassWatch (www.seagrasswatch.org) or other, locally-appropriate methods. The survey methodology can use traditional methods, camera systems or a combination of both;
2. Seagrass ecological status assessment. In-situ surveys to quantify the invertebrate communities inhabiting the seagrass meadows and appropriate comparison (reference) sites. Invertebrate sampling and analysis should follow standard methods applicable to the local sediment conditions. Animals within the samples should be identified to the lowest possible taxonomical level and counted.
3. Microplastics analysis. Collection of sediment samples for the analysis of microplastics in the seagrass beds and at appropriate reference locations. Samples to be collected, processed and analysed according to standard methodologies appropriate to the local conditions, to determine the type and quantity of micro-particles.
4. Water quality assessment. In-situ characterisation of water quality via sample collection or installation of measurement meters in the seagrass meadows and appropriate reference locations. Water quality parameters should be selected based on the types of pollution likely to occur in locations where the seagrass is present. Typical pollutants include macro-litter, sewage (e.g. microbial contamination, suspended particles), industrial effluents (e.g. heavy metals, chemical contaminants) and agricultural runoff (e.g. nutrients, chlorophyll, pesticides). More general markers of water quality such as dissolved oxygen, organic carbon, temperature and salinity, could be added where feasible. Sample collection, processing and analysis should be based on standard methodologies appropriate to the local conditions.
5. Seagrass temporal change. The use of satellite remote sensing to track change in the seagrass beds over time. Suppliers should describe their proposed methodology, including the satellite system that will be utilised, the timeframe of the analysis, the method to be used to define seagrass, whether ground-truthing will be necessary and the number of seagrass beds to be included (that is, whether the analysis will consider one seagrass bed as a test case or attempt tracking at all seagrass locations in Sri Lanka).

The supplier should briefly describe and justify the proposed methodologies. These protocols will be the base for further discussion with Cefas experts while designing the programme. For the analysis of any of the samples listed above, the supplier could describe the protocols that should be used or indicate the presence of third-parties laboratories that can perform such analyses.

By the end of the project (end FY 2021/20222), after the collaboration with Cefas, the supplier will be required to produce a report to summarise the design of the work agreed with Cefas. The report will include:

- A literature review on the seagrass, biodiversity and pollutant characterisation, including a knowledge gaps analysis on seagrass habitats and related marine litter impacts in Sri Lanka;

- A description of the survey designed in collaboration with Cefas to address the gaps highlighted during the literature review. The description will include a clear indication of the methods to use, with a list of protocols to be followed and the indication of the equipment to use for the collection of data and samples.
- A complete record (metadata) of any samples or other data collected during the scoping visits providing at least location coordinates (using a standard co-ordinate system), time of collection, site description, water depth if applicable, type of sample, weather conditions and analyses carried out;
- A map of the proposed sites to survey with the justification for the selection (accessibility, environmental relevance, presence of historical baseline data).
- A proposed calendar for the survey, considering feasible windows for the collection of data/samples in the sites where limitations (e.g., monsoons) might occur.
- A section to report the scoping activities, to include the purpose of the scoping, a description of the site(s), techniques used, results and recommendations for the programme.

The report should follow the Cefas OCPP report template, which will be shared with the supplier after the introductory meeting. The report will be shared with relevant national stakeholders in Sri Lanka and will be made freely available according to the guidelines of the UK Government. The publication of a peer-reviewed scientific article is not a requirement but can be considered.

The supplier is free to propose other studies to help determine temporal and geographical variability and importance of seagrass distribution (e.g., blue carbon storage); and the possible human and/or natural driving factors of the forementioned variability.

It is the preference that the supplier has extensive knowledge of Sri Lanka, can demonstrate experience of working in the relevant areas, or has a network of organisations and local staff that can be utilised for delivery.

The successful supplier will be responsible for obtaining any permits or other legal requirements needed to complete and publish the work.

In addition to the above, the following is required:

1. The work needs to be delivered between 5th of November 2021 and end of financial year 2021/2022 (31st of March 2022). If data processing cannot be completed prior to 31 March 2022, this may be able to be completed early April/May 2022 with prior agreement of Cefas
2. An inception meeting must occur within 15 days of the project commencement.
3. Followed by a draft plan (including, but not limited to, number of sites, number of samples, sample collection methods) within 15 days
4. A monthly short summary of activities should be provided (1 paragraph memo via email)
5. A midway meeting to report on what has been achieved, and what still needs to be achieved, must be attended halfway through the project.
6. A draft final report must be provided 15 days before the final report, for approval by the Cefas representative.
7. A copy of the final report and an electronic database with a copy of the stakeholders engaged during the work with contact details; all entries must be provided on completion of the project by the 31st of March 2022.

11. Data Protection

Suppliers should note that the Authority requires all suppliers are to be registered under the Data Protection Act 2018 and comply with (or equivalent national legislation) by the time their responses to the Invitation to Tenders (ITT) are submitted. The Authority will require evidence of such registration such as DPA notification number with the suppliers response to the ITT.

12. Security

12.1. Where appropriate the Authority may require supplier's personnel appointed to work on the contract to comply with HMG Baseline Personnel Security Standard. Suppliers should note that they will be required to supply all necessary information and documentation needed by the Authority to enable such checks to be made before the commencement of any contract and must meet the costs associated with carrying out such checks.

12.2. From time to time the Authority may have higher security requirements and the Provider's personnel working on the contract will need to "undertake and complete national security vetting at Counter Terrorist Check (CTC) or Security Check (SC) levels.

13. Duration

13.1. The Contract is expected to start in October 2021 and run until the end of the March 2022. The Authority reserves the right to extend the Contract subject to funding.
