UK Research and Innovation (UKRI) would like to appoint a set of facilitators to run a sandpit in the area of Forensic Science for the Justice System. The sandpit is scheduled to take place virtually (with all participants joining online) over five days across five weeks in June/July 2023 with confirmed dates still to be finalised.

- Background to the Requirement

The opportunity will be jointly funded by several research councils within UK Research and Innovation.

UK Research and Innovation works in partnership with universities, research organisations, businesses, charities, and government to create the best possible environment for research and innovation to flourish. We aim to maximise the contribution of each of our component parts, working individually and collectively. We work with our many partners to benefit everyone through knowledge, talent and ideas.

Further information can be found at UKRI – UK Research and Innovation

Purpose of This Quotation Exercise

The purpose of this exercise is to gather quotes on costs with a view to appointing a group of suitable sandpit facilitators.

2. Background to The Sandpit

UKRI will run a virtual sandpit in the area of Forensic Science for the Justice System.

Forensic science is defined here as the application of scientific methods to the recovery, analysis and interpretation of relevant materials and data in criminal and non-criminal investigations and court proceedings, is both an intelligence and evidential tool to assist in the delivery of justice. The justice system relies on forensic science to investigate incidents, to interrogate evidence, to bring perpetrators to justice and to exonerate the innocent.

At a time when trust in many public institutions is in flux, the availability and fair, transparent application of high-quality forensic science to underpin proceedings from incident to the courtroom is increasingly important in maintaining public confidence in the conduct of justice.

To accelerate its efforts to address these needs, UKRI plans to run a virtual Sandpit workshop in June/July 2023.

The aims of the sandpit are to:

- Bring new investment and kick start new activities in three priority areas;
- Digital forensics, tools and techniques
- DNA transference and persistence
- Projects involving aspects of both themes
- Provide an opportunity with a UKRI-wide remit to ensure that the projects funded following the Sandpits cross research council remits and involve the right researchers irrespective of their disciplinary backgrounds;
- Provide an opportunity that could be used by researchers to build new knowledge and design and develop and new technologies for application in forensic science, or for researchers to further test or explore repurposing existing knowledge and technologies for application in forensic settings;

- Facilitate new inter-institutional collaboration through which leading academic experts can form new partnerships with industry and practice and tackle the most pressing forensic science research challenges, working together to build the expertise in the domain;
- fit within a broader package of activities of activities involving other stakeholder, which together would bring strategic coordination to this field.

What is a sandpit?

A sandpit in this case is a virtual interactive workshop held over 5 days across five weeks (one day per week) involving 20-30 participants, the director and a number of independent stakeholders. An essential element of a sandpit is a highly multidisciplinary mix of participants taking part, some being active academic researchers and some being potential users of research outcomes, to drive creative, lateral thinking and radical approaches to addressing particular research challenges. Each sandpit has a different scientific focus.

Sandpits are intensive events. For the well-being of participants, the timetable should include informal networking activities as a break from the detailed technical, explorative discussions.

Outcomes of sandpits range from a single large multidisciplinary adventurous research project, to several smaller multidisciplinary projects, feasibility studies, networking activities, overseas visits and so on. These research projects will have a defined research programme with clear objectives and aims. The duration of sandpit research projects funded through this sandpit can be up to 12 months.

The outcomes are not pre-determined but are defined during the sandpit by the group. UKRI sandpits should produce ideas for research programmes that are creative, highly innovative, adventurous and potentially transformative. Ultimately, the funders are looking for high-quality research that offers the potential for a step-change in the area of Forensic Science for the Justice System .

Who are the key players at the sandpit and what are their roles?

Sandpits are led by a director with a group of mentors (subject matter experts) in support. This 'Director and Mentor' group is not eligible to receive research funding so act as impartial advisors and peer reviewers in the process. While the director and mentors are responsible for the content of the sandpit, the facilitators are responsible for the process – creating a facilitation plan for the 5 days. They design the activities and schedule sessions to create an environment where innovative ideas can be formed, shared, developed and accepted. In the intensive sandpit environment, facilitators need to constantly adapt schedules and activities to maintain the group's focus.

As detailed above, there are several key players with differing responsibilities at a sandpit – namely - the Director, Mentors, Facilitators, Stakeholders, Participants and the funder. These different sandpit roles are all important, without any one of these dimensions the sandpit would not be a success. These roles also allow us to separate the process from the technical and scientific content.

The Director: key to the success of a sandpit is a Director with the vision and skills to bring together a multidisciplinary team of researchers to address the research challenges, and with a commitment to the sandpit ethos. The director could come from either the academic or business sectors and will have considerable freedom to establish and run the sandpit in ways most appropriate to the achievement of its overall objectives. The funder/s will select the Director and he/she will aid with the scoping of the sandpit and work with the facilitators advising on the technical/scientific aspects.

The Mentors: are analogous to 'peer reviewers' but with more of a guidance role. They work with the Director to select the participants, and when at the sandpit provide objective advice and input to the participants and also offer comment on the research projects arising from the sandpit, with the overall aim to ensure that the sandpit leads to high-quality innovative research. The funder/s will select the mentors. This sandpit will involve 10-12 mentors, who work together with the Director.

The Director and Mentor team are the technical and scientific content owners prior to the sandpit and share this role with the participants during the sandpit.

The Stakeholders: these will vary depending on the sandpit topic. They are individuals, likely from organisations for whom the sandpit topic is relevant and important, and who are 'problem owners'. They could be from industry (companies or other bodies), Government (other government departments, agencies, local government) or charities, lobby groups, citizen's groups. Representatives from such organisations are important contributors to a sandpit, for instance they can bring challenging/provocative presentations about the current state of play relating to the problems being discussed at the sandpit, and also the political/social context. If applicable the funders will recruit the stakeholders but would be open to suggestions from the facilitator team.

The Funders (UKRI): the role of the staff present from UKRI is to organise and manage the sandpit, all the key players and ensure the aims of the sandpit are met. The staff will also be responsible for the real time peer review process (run by the facilitators at the event after receiving full briefing from UKRI) and associated audit trail and will reinforce the need for novelty, adventure & risk in the research being explored and eventually proposed. The UKRI representatives will also advise on the research proposal process e.g. requested resources, conflicts of interest, financial, and Intellectual Property Rights aspects. The UKRI representatives will oversee the peer review recommendations and final funding decisions that are made on the final day of the sandpit. A UKRI representative will be identified as the sandpit facilitator's primary contact for the sandpit and will be the focal point of information and advice for all key players at the sandpit. Only sandpit participants can access the funding which depends strongly on the quality of their research ideas proposed as judged by the process of real time peer review at the sandpit. UKRI have run sandpits jointly with other funding agencies and/or multinational companies where the funding available is offered jointly between the organisations.

The Participants: the group of sandpit participants will have been selected (by the Director and mentors) to attend the sandpit from an open invitation for expressions of interest (advertised on the UKRI Funding Finder website) and will therefore have an interest in the topic, and the right attitude and personal characteristics to the sandpit approach. They will represent a wide range of backgrounds, disciplines and experiences. The ethos of the sandpit is that the participants 'own' the ideas and the outputs, and that they have the responsibility to participate fully and constructively for the full 5 days. This includes making what might be hard decisions about prioritisation of ideas and funding allocations. Participants are sources of knowledge and expertise; they work with the content, generate ideas and ultimately develop research projects that are pitched and then submitted for research funding. Not necessarily all the participants leave the sandpit with funding.

The Facilitators: while the Director and Mentors are responsible for the scientific content of the sandpit, the facilitators are responsible for the process, specifically: designing and scheduling the various activities and sessions of the sandpit (e.g. ice-breakers, techniques for generating ideas, break-out groups, creative exercises, sessions on sharing and presenting research ideas and obtaining feedback etc.). The facilitators will work closely and collaboratively with the Director and the UKRI staff when designing the schedule. At the sandpit itself, the facilitators will take the lead on explaining the process and directing the activities. In addition, they will facilitate smaller groups as needed, working closely with the Director, Mentors and UKRI staff. The facilitators will support the UKRI staff to manage both the conflicts of interest and real time peer review process.

What happens at the sandpit?

There are several aspects to the sandpit:

- Getting to know everyone in the virtual room
- Agreeing a common language and terminology amongst people from a very diverse range of backgrounds and disciplines
- Sharing understanding and defining the scope of the issue
- Generating ideas by taking part in breakout sessions focused on the problem domain, using creative and innovative thinking techniques.
- Giving and receiving peer feedback on the ideas
- Forming groups and subsequently developing multidisciplinary, potentially transformative research projects
- Pitching research projects and receiving funding recommendations.
- Incorporating fun and social activities within each day

The sandpit process can be broken down into several key stages:

Pre-work (before day one of the sandpit):	Who are the participants? What expertise do they bring to the sandpit? What does the topic mean to them? Do they have any objects/posters/reading material that they want to share with others?
Interact and create problem statement:	Here the group focuses on the specific themes of the Sandpit. Through interaction with invited stakeholders, they debate the problems in detail to build a comprehensive picture of the situation. This stage can include site visits to give participants a clear understanding of specific issues. Mapping the problem begins to highlight technology, knowledge and research gaps that could hold the key to future solutions.

Clarify:	Exploring the topic/research challenges and developing problem statements
Ideate:	With a clear understanding of the issue, and helped by Mentors and facilitators, the group begins to form ideas in response to the problem. Drawing on the discussions and experiences, smaller groups begin to form around the emerging ideas, self-selecting the skills and expertise needed for success.
Develop:	Through a series of activities, the newly formed research groups develop, test and refine their ideas. The proposals are repeatedly examined, pitched, reworked and tested again. At this stage, groups begin to look at funding issues such as the level of resources required.
Implement:	Groups present projects as part of the real time peer review process before proposals are ranked in order based on their fit to the Sandpit assessment criteria budget. A final recommendation by the Director and Mentors is made to UKRI, and funding decisions are made. Sandpit funding is not spread evenly across participants: a variety of outcomes are possible, ranging from a single large research project, to several smaller projects, feasibility studies, networking activities, overseas visits and so on. Outcomes are not pre-determined, but are pitched, assessed and decided upon during the Sandpit. The funded programme will last for up to 12 months
Begin	After the sandpit, the successful Sandpit projects are converted into fully costed draft proposals. Draft proposals are sent to the Director & Mentors to verify that the proposals as submitted have the scientific themes/objectives generated and agreed at the workshop. Once the Director and Mentors are happy with the proposals then the project teams can submit the full proposals to Je-S (UKRI system).

The sandpit process is designed to allow space for creativity, while also building collaborative research teams.

- What is the focus of this sandpit?

The focus of this sandpit is Forensic Science for the Justice System. The sandpit will take place over 5 days over 5 weeks in June/July 2022. The sandpit will take place online. We are looking to fund feasibility studies/projects. We have a total budget of £1.5m to fund projects. There is no set upper limit for individual projects but we will look to fund projects across both our priority areas:

- Digital forensics, tools and techniques
- DNA transference and persistence
- Projects covering aspects of both these two themes

The broad aims of the sandpit are to generate research proposals which can:

- Form new collaborations between researchers and innovators in diverse research areas;
- Create new and innovative research ideas that tackle challenges faced across the criminal justice system
- Allow researchers to pitch projects for seed funding to test ideas;
- Address the key research challenges that are identified;
- Cultivate a common language between disciplines;
- Consider co-design with end-users;
- Facilitate interactions between key researchers, innovators and users.

The challenge identified for this sandpit is to:

- Bring new investment and kick start new activities in two priority areas;
- Digital forensics, tools and techniques
- DNA transference and persistence
- Provide an opportunity with a UKRI-wide remit to ensure that the projects funded following the Sandpits cross research council remits and involve the right researchers irrespective of their disciplinary backgrounds;
- Provide an opportunity that could be used by researchers to build new knowledge and design and develop and new technologies for application in forensic science, or for researchers to further test or explore repurposing existing knowledge and technologies for application in forensic settings;
- Facilitate new inter-institutional collaboration through which leading academic experts can form new partnerships with industry and practice and tackle the most pressing forensic science research challenges, working together to build the expertise in the domain;
- fit within a broader package of activities involving other stakeholder, which together would bring strategic coordination to this field.

The research ideas developed at the workshop could investigate some or a combination of the following challenges:

-Digital evidence tools and techniques

- Once access has been gained to data from digital devices, developing trusted and usable tools for real users, including providing trusted automation when dealing with large data sets.
- Handling, managing, processing and storing digital evidence.
- The potential of other advances in digital technologies and methods for delivering reliable evidence.
- The social, legal and ethical implications of techniques and technologies for criminal justice policy, practice and decision making and for those who have contact with the justice system.

- DNA transference and persistence

- Detection, persistence and transfer of DNA, body fluids, molecules in fingerprints, and particulate material under a range of conditions and in different environments.
- The potential of advances in DNA sequencing to deliver high quality reliability in the criminal justice context, especially in relation to mixed or partial profiles.
- The potential of other advances in DNA technologies and methods for delivering reliable evidence.
- The social, legal and ethical implications of techniques and technologies for criminal justice policy, practice and decision making and for those who have contact with the justice system.

Research projects that cover aspects of both of these two themes.
