During the period of notice the Contracting Authority may direct the Supplier to perform all or any of the work under the Contract. Where the Contracting Authority has invoked either of these rights, the Supplier may claim reasonable costs necessarily and properly incurred by him as a result of the termination or reduction, excluding loss of profit, provided that the claim shall not exceed the total cost of the Contract. The Supplier shall have a duty to mitigate its costs and shall on request provide proof of expenditure for any compensation claimed

Annex A – Specification

1. Background

International Regulatory Cooperation (IRC) is an emerging area of regulatory policy, that is becoming increasingly important to the UK as our relationship with the world changes.

In essence, IRC is about understanding the implications of regulation beyond national borders. It provides an important opportunity for countries to adapt their regulations to the rapidly evolving needs of a globalised world and to influence the regulation of others.

In practical terms, IRC means shaping and complying with international agreements, utilising international evidence, collaborating with international counterparts - either bilaterally or through multilateral forums when designing and enforcing regulations. .

There is growing political interest in how greater IRC could aid efforts to reform our regulatory environment in support of the economy – particularly in innovation-driven industries, trade, diplomatic and wider societal interests. However, at present, we lack an evidence base that demonstrates tangible domestic impacts.

This research intends to address this gap in understanding, through producing a report analysing case studies of existing IRC initiatives, undertaken by both the UK government and regulators, to establish the impacts these have had domestically for UK businesses and the wider economy.

This research is part of a larger programme of work to build the evidence base on IRC in support of several cross-government initiatives related to the UK's future trade and regulatory policy. It will help inform future policy development, including the publication of a government IRC strategy, and how the UK conducts future IRC initiatives.

2. Aims and Objectives of the Project

Overall aims

BRE commissioned the OECD to review the UK's international regulatory cooperation (IRC) practices¹ in 2018. This was in recognition of the importance of international cooperation in the context of an increasingly globalised world, EU Exit, our trade ambitions and the challenge of regulating increasingly transborder emerging technologies.

The OECD made a series of recommendations for how the UK can improve its approach to IRC, which the government committed to implementing in a response published in September 2020². This includes developing a cross-government IRC strategy, implementing a systematic approach to IRC with the UK regulatory development framework and raising awareness amongst policymakers and regulators.

² <https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/international-regulatory-cooperation-for-a-global-britain-government-response-to-an-oecd-review>

The response was also accompanied by a call for evidence, which allowed business and regulators to assess their current level of IRC engagement, note any challenges they face and how the government can support their IRC endeavours.

The OECD review, the government response and call for evidence showed that sectors such as financial services, food safety, transport and medicines regulation were particularly strong areas for IRC.

IRC has also been identified as a key future component of the UK's future trade and regulatory policy post-EU Exit.

In order to better understand how IRC can contribute to the government's broader economic agenda and demonstrate the value of this work to government departments and regulators, we are looking to gather evidence on what economic impacts IRC initiatives in the UK have already generated through analysing a series of case studies. This addresses a gap in current research which mostly concerns the potential hypothetical benefits at a macro level on the trade flows between countries from IRC, rather than proven specific impacts generated in a domestic context.

The final research report will be published and used to:

- Inform how we implement the OECD's recommendations, including the development of the government's IRC strategy, which will set out a range of policy measures developed to promote IRC..
- Build the case, and consensus around the need, for regulatory reform across government, regulators and external stakeholders – helping demonstrate to policy-makers and regulators the potential benefits of pursuing IRC initiatives as part of encouraging a wider cultural shift in policy-making.
- Act as a basis for future research into IRC, specifically modelling the potential benefits of IRC for certain UK sectors to help us prioritise areas for targeted intervention.
- Inform the priorities and approach of the Regulatory Diplomacy Programme led by the Foreign, Commonwealth and Development Office (FCDO), which aims to create a coherent approach to influencing standards development and regulation internationally in line with UK priorities.
- Act as an initial compendium of best practice examples of IRC carried out by UK departments and regulators.

Specific objectives

IRC is an emerging area of regulatory policy, therefore existing research into its impacts are limited. There is some evidence of successful IRC initiatives from the OECD review and the UK call for evidence. Most existing research considers the potential hypothetical benefits at a macro level on the trade flows between countries from IRC, rather than proven specific impacts generated in the domestic UK context. For example, Nordås and Kox (2009) estimating that regulatory harmonisation or mutual recognition could increase services trade by 13% to 30%, depending on the country. And the Commission of the European Communities finding that reducing non-tariff barriers to trade between the European Union and the United States by 50% in 2018 could lead to a 0.7% annual increase in GDP in the EU and a 0.3% increase for the U.S.

It is difficult to build a strong case for IRC in a UK domestic context based on this type of macro analysis. This research aims to bridge the gap between our understanding of the international and domestic impact of IRC initiatives, elucidating the impacts which specific existing or historical IRC initiatives have already had on the UK economy in certain sectors. This will help build the case for how IRC can contribute to broader government priorities around trade, investment, growth and employment.

Working with BEIS, the contractors will develop case studies in which they will be expected to review and analyse literature on their sectoral impacts to understand what domestic economic gains were realised. In particular:

- Did the IRC initiatives contribute to achieving greater regulatory coherence in promoting trade and investment to the UK? If yes, how?
- Did sectoral (goods and services) trade links between the UK and the countries in scope of the IRC initiatives intensify? And if yes, how much and what was the IRC initiatives' contribution?
- Did sectoral foreign direct investment links between the UK and the countries in scope of the IRC initiatives intensify? And if yes, validate the impact of the IRC initiatives' contribution?
- Validate the impacts that IRC initiatives contributed to the growth of the sector. How did it contribute (e.g. did they contribute to an increase of competition pressures?), how much (measured by GVA, investment and employment), and where in the UK?
- Was there any evidence that engaging international led to improved policy outcomes such as benefits for citizens and or business?
- Did the IRC initiative lead to the improvement of cross border regulatory enforcement outcomes between countries?
- Did international cooperation lead to the establishment of any long-term agreements with other countries such as Memorandum of Understanding or long-term information sharing agreements between countries?

The contractors will then be expected to synthesise their evidence and analysis across all of the case studies, in order to draw general conclusions on the potential benefits of IRC that can be applied more broadly.

3. Suggested Methodology

In the context of this research, the consideration of the impacts of IRC is limited to its potential to realise economic gains.

The contractor should carry out detailed sectoral case studies on economic gains of the IRC mechanisms. The case studies will provide concrete illustrations of how the IRC mechanisms contribute to realisation of economic gains within sectors and the broader UK economy.

What are the precise research questions that will be answered?

For each sectoral case study

What economic gains were realised through the IRC mechanisms within the sector? In particular:

- Did the IRC initiatives contribute to achieving greater regulatory coherence and reducing trade and investment costs? If yes, how?
- Did sectoral (goods and services) trade links between the UK and the countries in scope of the IRC initiatives intensify? And if yes, how much and what was the IRC initiatives' contribution?
- Did sectoral foreign direct investment links between the UK and the countries in scope of the IRC initiatives intensify? And if yes, validate the impact of the IRC initiatives' contribution?
- Validate the impacts that IRC initiatives contributed to the growth of the sector. How did it contribute (e.g. did they contribute to an increase of competition pressures?), how much (measured by GVA, investment and employment), and where in the UK?
- Was there any evidence that engaging international led to improved policy outcomes such as benefits for citizens and or business?
- Did the IRC initiative lead to the improvement of cross border regulatory enforcement outcomes between countries?
- Did international cooperation lead to the establishment of any long-term agreements with other countries such as Memorandum of Understanding or long-term information sharing agreements between countries?

Case study selection

BEIS will provide the contractor with an initial long list of potential case studies; this has developed from the OECD IRC review, the government response. (Annex 1 provides an overview of the potential long list).

The final selection of case studies will be agreed in collaboration with BEIS.

We estimate that the contractor would prepare about 10 case studies, however, this is negotiable depending on the depth of evidence available for each example used.

Case study evidence collection

These case studies should build on the information taken from the literature review, with desk research to find out what impact evidence already exists, and interviews with the relevant parties identified through the literature review and discussions with BEIS.

We expect the contractor to review the literature (academic and grey) related to each of the shortlisted case studies. The review should cover published peer reviewed academic material as well as public policy reports (including those published by the government and regulators), publicly available statistical information on traded sectors, work by think tanks, business organisations and trade groups.

We expect the contractor to carry out a series of interviews with stakeholders connected to the case studies including both sides: the parties delivering the IRC activities (such as government departments and regulators) and the “consumers” of the IRC activities – businesses/business organisations within the sector. By aiming to include (where possible) a sample of “consumers” would provide a more holistic impression of the impacts.

The interviews should be semi-structured, thereby ensuring a similar set of questions are asked of all interviewees but allowing for emergent issues to be explored.

The number of interviews per case study will depend on the number of the IRC mechanisms and activities involved for a particular sector. We expect up to 3 interviews with the parties delivering the IRC activities and 1 interview with the “consumers” of the IRC activities per case study. Interviews should be conducted by telephone or MS Teams and last up to 30 minutes.

Case study analysis and reporting

For each selected example, we expect the contractor to bring together evidence from the literature review and the interviews to develop complete case studies.

We realise that it is difficult to isolate and attribute a value to the economic impacts from the IRC mechanisms as a range of other factors influence them. Therefore, if necessary, we expect the contractor to look for proxy indicators to provide contextual information. We do not expect the contractor to carry out impact evaluation of any of the IRC activities. However, based on the literature review and the interviews, we want the contractor to form a view on an IRC contribution claim - whether the IRC interventions made a difference to the economic outcomes specified in the research questions.

The contractors will then be expected to synthesise their evidence and analysis across all of the case studies, in order to draw general conclusions on the potential benefits of IRC that can be applied more broadly.

4. Deliverables

Contractors are expected to plan and resource appropriately to meet the indicative timetable above and to be able to adapt flexibly should the timetable change. BEIS would welcome working in an agile manner with the contractors to co-develop the research and ensure it is on track to meet requirements throughout and would expect to hold weekly email updates and fortnightly update meetings.

Examples of expected deliverables:

Case Study Selection List:

A list of acceptable case studies will be provided to BEIS, to be agreed upon, prior to analysis.

Interview Lists and Topic Guides:

Interview participants from case study stakeholders are to be agreed upon with the BEIS Research Team, alongside agreeing upon topic guides for said interviews. These topic guides will likely go through stages of editing, and time should be allowed for this. BEIS will also aid in identifying potential interview participants if possible.

Interview transcripts:

As the contractor will be collecting data and evidence, such as the interviews, on behalf of BEIS, the contractor should include interview transcripts or any other data in the project outputs.

Reports:

At the end of the project we require a finalised, fully quality assured report which includes a clear and sufficient technical annex. A matrix of searched literature should also be provided, containing appropriate information about the literature that has been reviewed. From experience we expect that 2-3 drafts will be needed to reach the finalised report and these drafts should be delivered well in advance with sufficient time built in for review and comments. Each draft must be proof-read and delivered at a professional and publishable standard. Clear, precise and succinct language is essential. We expect this to be costed and accounted for in the timeline.

Presentation:

Near the close of the project, and following the delivery of the final report following comments from BEIS on drafts, the contractors should give a presentation within BEIS to the wider policy team, and be prepared to answer questions from them.
